Hard Work for Gifford

Stalin Has No Necktie

Rothschild's Amusement

Our Five Billion Plan

By Arthur Brisbane

AT THE PRESIDENT'S request, Walter S. Gifford, head of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, takes charge of the unemployment situation.

Mr. Gifford, an able man, great organizer and executive, undertakes a job most difficult, perhaps impossible.

Mr. Gifford is expected "to avoid the dole," also difficult. You can't handle millions of unemployed by sending nice ladies and gentlemen from the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., or the Salvation Army around to see what they need and buy it for them. If you can afford for each needy family $15 a week, the best plan is to give the $15. What is needed is to put people back to work, but to do that you must have a plan and we have none. We are just wondering what ails us.

Stalin, powerful, intelligent, discovers that when you want an automobile to go faster you must step on the gas. As with automobiles, so with workers.

The workers' accelerator is the pay that you give them, the pocketbook.

The ablest workers in Russia will hereafter get special cash payments, and plants most effectively run will be rewarded with distributions of money. Human nature is human nature, even with a Karl Marx label.

Stalin intends to make his five-year plan a success, and knows that he must do it by making others share his enthusiasm.

To know, as every intelligent man should, the character of Stalin, who is the keystone of the arch in the Russian edifice, read Isaac Don Levine's "Stalin," published by the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, in New York city.

To learn that Stalin, possibly the most powerful man on earth, controlling 150,000,000 million of people in a land with potential wealth exceeding that of the United States, does not include any necktie in his wardrobe, will interest you, as it did to read that Queen Elizabeth had more than a thousand dresses in her closets, and no bathtub in her palace. Stalin has a bathtub, and uses it.

Baron de Rothschild, surviving grandson of Amschel Rothschild, who established the family, has celebrated his 88th birthday. He entered the house of Rothschild 76 years ago, and retired 20 years ago, to enjoy life and live long. His Paris house, for years, has been a center of social activity, and he is said to have amused himself watching the "best born" scramble for the expensive presents that he sometimes gave to his guests.

He has given generously to charity, which will be forgotten when he dies, and has given millions to science, gifts that will live forever.

Your Uncle Sam, in spite of all his troubles, goes on piling up gold. On Wednesday he had four billion nine hundred and fifty millions of the beautiful metal, and the Federal Reserve Bank had credits of $1,303,000,000. It is interesting to contrast what seems to be our five billion dollar gold plan with the Russian five-year plan, and strange that a nation should have a big deficit and be borrowing money when it has on hand six billions, and almost five billions of it in gold.

The grandson of Blucher, the Prussian general, is dead at 65. He lived much in England, and was the second German elected to a British club after the war. The first was the German ambassador.

England may well have a friendly feeling for Blucher. Without his fighting grandfather Marshal von Blucher, the battle of Waterloo might have gone the other way. In that case Napoleon might never have seen St. Helena, and Wellington, not now be lying in his fine stone tomb, in the crypt next to Lord Nelson, beneath the great dome of St. Paul's.

Dr. Tyler, who investigates things at Teachers' College, Columbia, says the student of great individuality, or the highly strung, nervous student, does not get the high marks. They go to the "students of average type."

Later in life, the high marks go to those that have individuality and that are high strung. Being like everybody else is good in little things. Being unlike everybody else helps you in the big things.

Charles H. Tuttle, recently United States district attorney

BILLION OUR CRIME COST; 2-3 IS 'DRY'

Wickersham Report Tells of Nation's Huge Toll to "Rackets"

Washington, Aug. 21 (AP)—The Wickersham commission places the annual cost of crime in this country at beyond a thousand million dollars.

Its latest report reached no lump-sum estimate but contained a series of staggering statistics which even in their conceded incompleteness showed a tremendous toll taken yearly by criminality.

Prohibition was named by the 657-page document, made public today after resting for at least a week on President Hoover's bookshelf, as a heavy contributor to this high cost.

It was estimated that $34,628,505, or two-thirds of all the government funds appropriated for the administration of federal criminal justice during the year 1929-30, were expended toward prohibition enforcement alone. To this sum should be added $5,000,000 or more as the cost of civil proceedings in prohibition cases.

Studding almost every page of the report were scores of other certified and estimated figures dealing with both the annual direct and indirect cost of crime. Totalled they reached well above the $1,119,790,000 mark, or more than $3,000,000 a day.

FIGURES STAGGERING

Here are concededly incomplete, fragmentary figures reaching past the billion mark—some of them rough estimates or mere indications of magnitude—which were mentioned today by the report:

$247,780,000—annual expenditure of 300 cities for criminal justice.

AT JAP'S DEATH PARTY

Here's an exclusive photo of Mrs. Mary Reisner, known on the stage as Mary Dale, star witness in the mysterious disappearance of Hishashi Fujimura, rich Japanese importer, from the liner Belgenland. With Mildred Harris Chaplin and other notables, she attended a wild party on the ship, at the height of which, Fujimura oddly vanished. This snap was made recently on the sands at Atlantic City. (International Newsreel photo.)

JAP HEARD IN A 'FLIRT' SPAT

New York, Aug. 21 (AP)—Asst. U. S. Atty. J. Edward Lumbard boarded the Belgenland today when it arrived from Halifax and began an inquiry among members of the crew about the mysterious disappearance from the vessel last week of Hisashi Fujimura, wealthy Japanese silk importer.

Among those questioned was Jan Ribas, an artist, employed by the line to make sketches of passengers. Ribas said that late on Wednesday night of last week, or early Thursday morning, about 24 hours before Fujimura's disappearance, he heard the importer berating a woman in his stateroom for flirting with another man.

Ribas occupied stateroom No. 60 and Fujimura No. 62, Mary Reisner, former show girl, hired as governess for Fujimura's daughter, Kashira, 7, and now the chief figure in the inquiry, occupied No. 64.

Ribas knocked at the importer's stateroom door at 7 a. m. Friday, and received no answer, repeating the process at 9 o'clock.

Among others held for the inquiry on shipboard, it was said, were members of the ship's orchestra and radio men.

THOUSANDS IN CHINA CITY DROWNED

Hankow Doomed by the Flood Waters; People Welcome Death as Release

Hankow, Aug. 21 (AP)—Believing Hankow doomed to destruction by the Yangtse river flood, all natives able to do so were fleeing today.

Hundreds of thousands of residents of Hankow and its sister cities Wuchang and Hanyang, saw the irresistible waters advance.

The majority were unable to escape. To hundreds of these, death was a welcome release.

Despite the repugnance to suicide among the Chinese, this means of escaping the terrible consequences of the flood was being used by an increasing number.

Hankow, with a population of 1,826,000, is the principal inland city of modern China.

Another river on rampage today is the Hwai Ho, which runs through Northern Honan, Anhwei and Kiangsu provinces. Eighty counties in an area of 9000 square miles and under three to ten feet of water.

Flood Likely to Be Greatest in History

Washington, Aug. 21 (AP)—Flood waters in China's fertile valley of the Yangtse river may be churning up one of the worst calamities of the age.

Chinese reports on the disaster as interpreted by Red Cross officials indicate that the flood is the greatest catastrophe the country ever has faced.

"Perhaps it will rank as the greatest in the world," said Ernest J. Swift, assistant director of insular and foreign operations of the Red Cross, "—not as reckoned in terms of loss of life, but in the number of people affected."

"It is estimated that 31,000,000 people are affected and that 10,000,000 are homeless and destitute.

"The effects of the flood probably will be felt for a good many months, and certainly until the waters recede and the natives are able to plant and harvest crops."

The Yangtse, the most important river in China, is in the south-central part of the country and drains an area larger than that drained by the upper and lower Mississippi, the Ohio, the Arkansas and White rivers.

Swollen by unprecedented rains, the river system has flooded a wide area of regions densely populated because of the great fertility of the valley.

PLOT TO BURN WORKSHOPS IS FEARED

Extra Precautions Are Taken by Warden; Machine Guns Are Ready for Outbreak

The Boston fire department joined the defense fo State Prison today when threats of firing the wooden workshops trickled through the "underground telegraph.

Mobilized against disorders of the past three days, the new move brought state and city police as well as the firemen into play to prevent a planned "mush-out" during the excitement of the blaze.

The threat of incendiarism gave officials a new problem and a conference was called with Fire Chief Henry Fox, District Chief Philip Tague, Warden James A. Hogsett, Dr. A. Warren Stearns, commissioner of corrections and Capt. William W. Livingston of the Charlestown police.

READY FOR BREAK

Officials recalled a fire set two years ago that threatened to turn the prison into a blazing holocaust.

"If they start a fire in the hopes of freedom they are badly mistaken," Dr. Stearns said today. "The gates will not be open for firemen, but they will fight any blaze from the walls.

Japs to Fix Motor for Lindy

Nemuro, Japan, Aug. 21 (AP)—The Lindbergh monoplane progressed a short distance toward Nemuro today—at the end of a tow rope.

After having been stranded since early Wednesday because of fog and motor trouble off Ketoi Island, Kurile Archipelago, Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh were forced to accept the aid of the government steamship, Shimushiru Maru, in getting their helpless plane to an anchorage safer than the wild little island 410 miles northeast of here.

They reported by wireless today that they had been towed to Muroton Bay, Shimushiru Island, 18 miles southwest of Ketoi. Colonel Lindbergh said he would spend two or three hours working on the motor and then test it.

At Lindbergh's request, the department of communications announced that Japanese mechanics were to start from Tokio tonight to aid in repairs to the big monoplane. Why he is asking aid of Japanese mechanics was not clear here.

According to Mrs. A. T. Sloan, proprietor of the lodging house, the girl appeared at the house a week ago and said she had quarreled with her parents.

Shortly after midnight, the hourly hospital checkup showed that the girl was in her bed, but when the next checkup was made she was missing.

FIGHT OVER RUM SALE TO CLUB LOOSENS GANG GUNS

SOUTH BOSTON RACKETEERS FIRE ON FOE

North End Bootlegger Escapes but Underworld Knows "The Finger Points"

By THE MASKED REPORTER

(Copyright, 1931, by the Boston Evening American. All rights reserved.)

Wealthy Boston clubmen ordered liquor from the wrong bootlegger and thereby set the spark which has plunged the underworld into war.

In the quiet sanctums of one of the city's most exclusive clubs the torch was unwittingly applied almost two months ago by men of high social position.

The happenings of that night I have learned in detail from persons who know the identity of those who played the principal parts.

Gangland, watching with internal strife, waited with drawn guns for the last straw to be broken. And even gangland laughed when the signal for open warfare was flashed in the ultra fashionable club in Trinity pl.

For many months a prospering South Boston bootlegger had the exclusive rights to liquor sales in this club, located only one block from Boston police headquarters.

He parked two cars in a public parking space across from the club each night. Those cars were loaded with choice liquors.

RUM CAR GUARDED

When any of the club members telephoned for liquor the order was relayed to one of the runners in the cars and the bottles were promptly delivered.

It was a well arranged system and was conducted without interference from police. The only precaution taken was against possible hi-jicking and to offset that danger the liquor-laden cars were always trailed by two other machines carrying paid gunmen.

While the cars were parked a lone gunman stood guard and the runners plied back and forth to the club. It was a highly profitable stand. The custom was the best. No "cuff" customers, these. Paid for the booze promptly on delivery. And plenty of repeat orders.

Just the kind of a play to excite the envy of other bootleggers whose profits had been somewhat affected by business depression. And then came the inevitable attempt of outsiders to "muscle in."

One night, six months ago, there was a particularly heavy rush of business at the club. The South Boston bootlegger put on extra runners to take care of the trade. Things were going fine until about midnight a stranger hove in sight with the pockets of his coat bulging suspiciously.

He was identified as a member of a North End bootleg ring and was addressed by one of the South Boston runners as follows:

"Where you going, Buddy?"

"What's it to you?"

"Well, if you're taking booze into the club you're walking too far. We take care of all the guys in that joint."

"Well, I was sent up here with it and I'm bringing it in."

"Bring it in this time but tell it—not to send any more up here or there'll be trouble."

WARNING IGNORED

The warning was apparently ignored for there were rather frequent deliveries by the outside mob. Finally the South Boston leader took a hand. He walked up to his competitor one afternoon as he made his way toward the club entrance with several bottles of rye.

"If you bring that stuff in the club they'll carry you back to the North End in a hearse," he remarked.

The North Ender's reply was in effect that he didn't think much of the South Boston man.

Fortunately for the intruder two police officers happened to walk by the club as he made his exit and drove away.

Several weeks later he had a closer call. He drove up to the club one night early in June and was rather surprised when no one objected to his entry of the club with an armful of liquor.

ESCAPES GUN FIRE

As he stepped out however, a black sedan drove swiftly by the main door. Two shotguns poked their noses out of the rear window and there was a deafening roar in the narrow street.

The lone bootlegger dodged when he saw the guns levelled at him and the volley tore through two automobiles behind which he had sought shelter.

The next morning two irate car owners reported the damage to the police but the mystery was never explained. The South Boston bootlegger got rid of his competitors but the incident served to break the gangland truce established in the underworld after the burial of Carmelo Geiffre.

LEGION TO AID WAR AGAINST GANGDOM

Governor Urges Veterans to Drive on Communism; Points to Germany's Peril

Plymouth, Aug. 21—National legislation, aimed at curbing the sale of firearms by mail order houses, is sought in a resolution, which will be presented today at the 13th annual convention of the Massachusetts department of the American Legion in session here.

The resolution, offered as the Legion's solution of the national crime wave, was presented by Everett Post, 178. It is expected to be adopted unanimously.

The federal ban on shipping firearms through the mails would be extended to include shipment by express, by the terms of the resolution. The proposed restriction, according to Asst. Dist.-Atty. Edmund R. Dewing of Suffolk County, chairman of the resolutions committee, would strike at the roots of gangdom and remove many of the tools of the criminals' trade.

Governor Ely, the featured speaker yesterday, painted the industrial future of New England in glowing colors, and said that the region was emerging from the shadow of the economic depression.

"There never was a time when the faith you espouse was more sorely needed than now," he declared. "Communism has penetrated to Germany and even to the borders of England. There is something on the horizon worth thinking about. Democracy must meet the challenge.

GIRL WHO BEAT POLICE MATRON IS FINED $250

Brockton Miss, Known as a Rum-Runner, Also Gets a Suspended Jail Sentence

Miss Mae Phipps, 20, called by the police Brockton's feminine rum-runner and stenographer, paid fines of $250 in Taunton District Court today and was placed on probation for a year as the result of a brawl with Taunton police and a matron last Friday.

Miss Phipps was arrested after a car she was driving plunged into a ditch.

At the police station she wisided a black jack on the head of Mrs. Margaret B. Gribbon, police matron, and paid $100 today for it. On the same charge she was given a three months suspended sentence and placed on probation for a year.

She entered guilty pleas to charges of drunkenness and drunken driving, paying $100 on the latter. The other was filed.

Another $50 was paid on a charge of reckless driving.

A crowded courtroom met disappointment when Miss Phipps failed to testify in her own defense, but clashes between her counsel and police were frequent before the findings.

A court record showing a conviction of rum-running was presented in court against Miss Phipps by Patrolman Galligan, the arresting officer.

'Bunzo the Monk' Is Trapped by Pet Dog He Evicted

Bunzo, the monkey, is back on his chain again.

After two days and two nights of freedom, during which his pranks made monkeys out of a lot of folk in Revere and Chelsea, he was caught napping in Chelsea today and captured.

He was napping in a dog house—having evicted the dog—in the yard of Mrs. John Gillespie in Carroll st.

Mrs. Gillespie was awakened early this morning by the whining of her big St. Bernard.

"Carrera" was nosing at the back door, his tail between his legs. He led Mrs. Gillespie to the dog house and there, in full possession, slumbering in the straw, was little Bunzo.

Without disturbing him, Mrs. Gillespie telephoned his owner, John Sears of Eastern ave., and when Bunzo awoke and peeked out of the dog house door ready for another day of sport, there was Sears staring him in the face.

Sears paid Mrs. Gillespie a reward of $5 the police went back on regular platoon duty, the National Guard was demobilized, Flynn let his chickens loose again and at his home in Beachland st., Revere, F. W. Lane gave a large guffaw, having cooked and eaten for breakfast the summer squash hurled at him yesterday by Bunzo.

YATES SAT WITH GIRL IN SENATE

New York, Aug. 21—While Ruth Jayne Cranmer's attorneys conferred on plans to get her out of jail, further details of her relationship with State Senator Roy T. Yates of New Jersey, who was shot in her apartment here last Friday night, came to light.

Investigation at Trenton, New Jersey's state capital, revealed that during last winter's session of the Legislature the young woman often sat beside Senator Yates in the Senate chamber. She posed then as a student of journalism.

It also was established that, as Ruth Jayne, she had reservations at the same Trenton Hotel at which Yates stopped for the entire duration of the session.

Miss Cranmer's attorneys will demand in court today that the charge of felonious assault be dismissed. They are confident, they said, that she will be released on bail, at the least, with dismissal of the charge to come after Yates has fully recovered.

COURT CALLS CONFERENCE IN GROSS CASE

Divorce Decree of Ex-Gov. Harrison's Daughter Held Up, Pending a Ruling

Chicago, Aug. 21 (AP)—A struggle for a million dollar trust fund which has been waged for several years in the courts of Illinois, New York and France by Capt. Christian Channing Gross and Mrs. Virginia Harrison Gross entered a new phase today.

Judge Joseph B. David, who signed a divorce decree which settled some of their tangled marital affairs, only to vacate his order a few minutes later, ordered attorneys for the litigants to confer with him today.

PATERNITY INVOLVED

Robert Cantwell, Jr., attorney for the former Chicagoan who is now in the United States diplomatic service at Ottawa, moved the vacation of the divorce, saying it was necessary to determine the paternity of a three year old daughter of Mrs. Gross to protect the child's rights in the trust fund.

Cantwell said Capt. Gross did not deny fatherhood of the child. He merely wanted a ruling on the point.

Cantwell said Capt. Gross has asked him for a leave of absence in order to come to Chicago to tell his story of the child, inasmuch as further action depends on the court's paternity ruling. Gross also asked that Mrs. Gross, together with the child, Anna, be brought from France to the Chicago courts.

WILL SEEK CUSTODY

The Grosses acknowledge the parentage of two children, of whom Capt. Gross has obtained custody. If the court rules the third also is the daughter of Capt. Gross, he will attempt to gain custody of her.

Cantwell said Gross was unaware of Anna's existence until she was almost three years old.

Mrs. Gross is the daughter of Francis Burton Harrison, former governor-general of the Philippines, and heiress of a large San Francisco estate.

NURSE MOREY LARS THOMTE

A MILLION DOLLAR SMILE

"Sunshine in illness," seems to be a slogan of Lars Thomte, 10, of Quincy, who for two weeks has been an infantile paralysis patient at the Haynes Memorial Hospital in Brighton. How that boy loves flowers and post cards! He seems to get a kick out of everything. And what a smile he produces and what joy he seems to create in the hospital! Here you see Lars' head sticking out of one of the respirators. What a smile! His nurse, also smiling, is Helen Morey. All of Quincy seems to be sending good wishes for quick recovery to young Thomte.

Some Give Their Blood, Some Don't—for Others

By WIN BROOKS.

My wife and I climbed the hill to the Haynes Memorial Hospital yesterday. We stood for a while in the yard.

We have a daughter in the hospital. She has scarlet fever and a fractured skull.

As on other visits I was prompted to remark that "It might be worse."

As on other visits my wife agreed. "Yes," she said, "it might be infantile paralysis."

Standing there in the yard we could hear the drone of Drinker respirators helping paralyzed children to breathe. We could see the heads of two children, their bodies encased in the iron lungs. We could see other children lying helpless on their beds, others being aided by nurses.

"Did you read of the crippled boy who hitch-hiked 20 miles to Holyoke to give his blood for serum?" I asked.

"Yes, she said, "it was a splendid thing. To think he gave his blood to keep some other child from being paralyzed."

We went into the hospital. We talked with a young doctor we had met on previous visits.

"I did not see you last night," I remarked.

"No," he said. "It was my night off."

"It must be a great relief to get away for even a short while," my wife suggested.

He hesitated, did not reply.

"Do you get many nights off?" I asked.

"Not many these days," he admitted.

"How do you relax? Theater, movies, dance, or what?"

He half smiled.

"Well," he said, "last night I drove down on the Cape with another doctor to ask a man for some of his blood for infantile paralysis serum."

He didn't say any more then but it occurred to me during our visit that he hadn't told everything and when we were leaving I asked him:

"Did you get what you went after last night?"

"No," he said. "We didn't get it. It was a trip wasted."

"What was the matter?"

"Well," he said, "this man wanted money for his blood. We had no money to give him."

"Was he a former victim of infantile paralysis?"

"Yes, some years ago."

"Was he crippled?"

"No."

"Weak?"

"As strong as you or I."

"What was his reason, then?"

"No reason other than what I have told you. He wanted money for his blood. He wanted to sell it; he wouldn't give it."

"Well, many like that?"

"Thank God, no. That was the first I ever met."

My wife and I went outside. The sun was warm and the air was clean there on the hill. We could hear the respirators humming like giant vacuum cleaners. We could see the children in the paralysis ward. We thought of a man who put a price on sturdy limbs.

"Some of them will get well and some won't get well," I said.

"Some will walk again and some won't," said my wife.

We started down the hill. My wife stopped suddenly and bent down in the grass. I got down beside her.

There was a worm, all slimy, crawling there.

"Isn't that worm wonderful," she said.

I agreed that it was. We went on down the hill.

Bittler Beaten Into Insensibility Before Crowd Stoned Congressman's Brother

Adam Bittler, 37, dying at City Hospital, suffered his injuries yesterday during the battle in the South Boston restaurant of Edward J. McCormack, brother of Congressman John W. McCormack, police learned today.

Bittler has a fractured skull, a broken nose and internal injuries.

He was hit twice with a bottle during the free-for-all fight preceding the stoning of the restaurant and the stoning of Edward McCormack's home in E. 6th st., he told Inspector James A. Dennessy of the headquarters homicide squad.

Dennessy went to the hospital accompanied by Stenographer William Shanahan, who took Bittler's statement.

The dying man told Dennessy there was an argument about someone stealing tonic preceding the gang attack.

After he was beaten he knew nothing until he recovered consciousness in his home in P st., near the restaurant, he said.

From another source, police were informed that Bittler was employed in some capacity by the restaurant.

The fight and the gang attacks on the restaurant and McCormack's home, reported exclusively in the Boston Evening American yesterday, continued under investigation by police of Station 12 and headquarters detectives.

GIRL VICTIM OF FIEND SLAYING

Kenosha, Wis., Aug. 21 (INS)—Wisconsin's fashionable resort area, and Chicago and Milwaukee, were combed today for clues to the identity of a red-haired young woman who lost a desperate fight for her honor and whose body was found beside railroad tracks at Silver Lake, west of here, yesterday.

Indications were that the victim had been placed on the rails so that a train might run over her and destroy identifying marks, but she evidently recovered consciousness and crawled a few feet away before she died.

The body was clad in a wine-colored silk dress and underwear, but no shoes and stockings, which led authorities to believe the attack had occurred elsewhere than the spot where the body was found. Her hair was matted with mud, although there was no other mud near the body.

Young Cabot, son of Dr. Hugh Cabot, famous surgeon, revealed physicians had examined his wife for infantile paralysis, but the tests proved negative.

TALKS WITH WIFE.

"I talked with Mrs. Cabot at the hospital last night," he said, "and although she was apparently normal, she was unable to throw any light on the cause of her ailment, which has baffled a galaxy of physicians.

"Personally, I think it was either grip or influenza, although infantile paralysis is not eliminated simply because the test was negative.

Mrs. Cabot thought that a combination of three things might have contributed to her illness.

FELL IN STORE

"While shopping last Saturday morning she tripped and fell on a department store stairway. Also she suffered from a pain in her right side and had a severe cold.

NARROW GAUGE HEAD ENDS LIFE

of the railroad, at about the hour scores of employes were arriving at the offices to begin the day's work.

Powell saw Wells through the glass door of his office on the second floor of the wharf when he arrived this morning. He was apparently sleeping or dozing in his chair at the desk.

The general manager saw nothing amiss in this. Wells lived in New York and summered at Westport, Ct., and often arrived in Boston early in the morning and was about his duties before others reached the office.

NOBODY HEARD SHOT

Powell, not wishing to disturb the president, did not enter his office at that time.

At 8:45 a stenographer, carrying the morning mail, knocked on the doors of Wells' office and receiving no response and believing he was asleep, consulted the general manager.

Powell said he would deliver the mail himself. He tenered the office and saw that Wells' face was covered with blood. Then he saw the rifle between his knees.

The rail head had been dead only a short time, but nobody on the wharf or in Atlantic ave. heard the shot that ended his career.

Daniel Keefe, janitor in the offices, told police he saw Wells arrive and go into his office at 7:45 and at 8 o'clock saw him go out again.

Five minutes later, Keefe said, the president returned and went into his office.

MAY HAVE HAD RIFLE

Whether he had gone out to get the rifle, which he may have concealed somewhere, was not known. Keefe saw no rifle. Other employes of the road said they never had been any weapon in the offices.

Dr. Thomas Anglen of the Haymarket Relief Station pronounced Wells dead and Medical Examiner Dr. George Burgess Magrath was notified.

Police of Station 2 were called and Sergt. Cornelius F. Leary took command of a detail assigned to the wharf. A large crowd gathered as news of the tragedy spread among commuters arriving at the wharf via the ferry from Lynn, Revere, Winthrop and East Boston.

Pending the arrival of Dr. Magrath, the body was not disturbed.

CAUSE A MYSTERY

It was learned that Wells had last previously visited the railroad offices yesterday morning. He left before noon. He spent last night at the Attleboro home of his brother, George W. Wells, vice-president an dformer general manager of the railroad.

Shortly before 8 o'clock Wells telephoned his 84-year-old mother, Mrs. John Doane Wells, who lives with his sister, Miss Louisa D. Wells, at 19 Madison st., Cambridge, and apologized for not being with them last night.

His brother was notified and came at once to Boston. He notified the wife of the victim, who was at her summer home in Poleytown rd., Westport, Ct., and a son, Gardner F. Wells, Jr., of 67 West 11th st., New York.

Despite protestations of relatives and friends that Wells had been in good spirits it was learned by police from close business associates that he was depressed and greatly concerned over personal finances.

Recently, it was said, he was obliged by financial embarrassment to sign over deeds to some of his property in Attleboro.

SUICIDE THREAT

A close associate told the police that Wells a few weeks ago threatened to commit suicide. His associate gave him a "fight talk" at the conclusion of which the rail head remarked:

"Oh, I was only kidding."

This associate said Wells obviously was on the verge of a nervous breakdown.

Denial that the affairs of the Narrow Gauge were responsible for his worries was made by Atty. Hoar in a statement in which the road's counsel praised the president highly.

"I don't know why he killed himself. It is a mystery to me," said Hoar. "I knew him very well and liked him. I saw him last week and he gave no indication of being depressed.

"It may have been financial reverses, but I dislike to say that on account of his wife and son. He was in perfect health, or appeared to be."

HAPPY, SAYS SON

His son, an only child, graduate of Harvard, said:

"I saw my father only two weeks ago. He was in good spirits. He was happy, in good health and apparently free from worry."

Born in Quincy, Wells was educated in the public schools of Cambridge and Boston, and later at Tech.

Following his graduation he was employed by Thomson-Houston Co., Lynn engineers, the General Electric Co., and later as manager of construction and public utilities by Stone & Webster.

In his capacity as consultant in various engineering concerns he played a prominent and picturesque part in the electrification of horse car lines throughout New England and New York.

He became president of the Narrow Gauge late in 1927 after the Eastern Railway Associates took over the road from Karl Adams, son of the late Melvin O. Adems, its president for many years.

Electrification of the Narrow Gauge was accomplished under his direction the following year.

THE LOVES OF CHARLIE CHAPLIN

King of Laughs and World's Unluckiest Lover

(Copyright, 1931, by the Boston Evening American)

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

(As his romance with Pola Negri progressed, Charlie became "the world's happiest man." Hollywood noted an appreciable change in the comic. But not for long.)

CHAPTER 17

Pola continued to work hard. So did Charlie.

But when the duties of the studio didn't enslave them, they saw each other. And they planned for the future.

Was Pola going to continue her film work? Did Charlie want her to?

Could two such temperaments harmonize? Hollywood asked these questions, queries which were to be publicly washed and ironed.

Cupid was king again and romance lived anew for Charlie and Pola Negri.

Pola expressed her views on love and marriage in the press. Throughout all her sentiments there ran the undercurrent of absolute individualism, of a desire that centered about and around only Pola.

"Marriage of two people who take their work as seriously and as deeply as Charlie and I do, should not have any difficulties, rather we would have a tendency to develop through mutual inspiration and understanding," Pola said.

DESIRED LOVE

Pola's desire in life was to be loved and admired as an artist.

"In Europe it is immaterial whether a woman be married or single, just so she be a real artist," Pola maintained.

And temporarily Charlie agreed with her.

One night in Charlie's Beverly Hills mansion in the colony inhabited only by the cream of the filmsters, the funster and his bride-to-be had a heart to heart talk about their marriage.

Charlie told Pola about his past loves and the Polish beauty confessed all to Charlie.

She heard Chaplin tell of his romantic flares with May Collins, Edna Purviance, Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Clare Sheridan, and his marriage failure with Mildred Harris, but the past remained only the past to Pola. She was looking into the future.

Charlie wanted to be so careful before taking a second marriage voyage. He wanted to be doubly sure.

His blonde and beautiful divorced wife, Mildred Harris, was telling a curious world all about the ways and wherefores of her inability to remain Mrs. Chaplin. Charlie wanted to be sure that Pola was sure of him and herself.

Incidentally, Mildred Harris came to New England a few months ago. Since her divorce from the film king, her name has been coupled with that of Georges Carpentier, French heavyweight, and with one of Boston's own sons, Mickey Alpert, conductor of festivities at the Westminster Roof.

Mildred "barnstormed" with Micky through New England and gossip rumored marriage. Micky smiled when repeated queries came to him and didn't say yes or no. He kept on saying "maybe."

Well—to get back to Charlie and Pola—

STORY CAUSES RIFT

And then one day there appeared in the press of the western coast a statement attributed to Charlie in which it was claimed he felt he was not rich enough to marry Pola.

It rocked the film colony. There were many "I told you so" floating around.

Pola was furious. She shut herself in her palatial home. She refused herself to everybody.

Could it be possible that Charlie was hedging in his part of the bargain?

The story read that "Charlie is too poor to marry now."

Pola was determined to return to Charlie the blazing solitaire diamond, a single stone, that half covered her third finger, a gift from him.

But love finds a way, and Charlie sought out his Pola.

And so they plighted their troth over again after a several-day desolate break. Once again Pola was "too happy to sleep." And Charlie was again "the happiest man in the world" after a conference of conciliation in which the new queen of make believe said she forgave him.

BELIEVED ELOPING

Charlie went to Pola's house early and he stayed late.

To celebrate the reunion Pola and Charlie took a trip from Hollywood to Santa Barbara. Chaplin drove Pola in his car, and her secretary and maid and chauffeur followed in another motor.

It was believed at the time that they were eloping—tying the knot permanently to avoid further disturbing climaxes.

Pola stayed on when Charlie had to return to the studios. But his spirit was expressed in the flowers that filled the rooms, in the constant long distance telephone messages that came from him from Los Angeles and telegrams that further punctuated the day.

Everything pointed to the altar as the objective.

Charlie invited Mary and Douglas Fairbanks on a trip to the Orient. Hollywood gossiped that this was too wonderful an opportunity for a honeymoon not to be neglected by any one in the engaged class.

But the romance was not to last. It was an attraction of opposites. To Charlie love is always a mental adventure, it is said. He loves not physically but with his mind. He has a shrewd, penetrating, inquisitive mind that X-rays every feminine heart and soul with which he comes in contact.

Melancholy, he is the eternal jester, not of, but at, life.

Pola, on the other hand, is anything but cool and studious. In love, her heart is inflamed with passion. She doesn't think. She only feels.

Pola is not an analyst. She isn't now. She wasn't then. She was all impulse.

But she lived "only for my art."

20 Miles Inside Polar Ice Pack, Nautilus Gets Ready For Its Undersea Cruise

EXCLUSIVE

By CAPT. SIR HUBERT WILKINS

Commander of the Wilkins-Ellsworth Transarctic Submarine Expedition.

(Copyright, 1931, Throughout the World by New York American, Inc.; Hearst Enterprises, Inc., and King Features Syndicate, Inc. All Rights Reserved. Reproduction Prohibited in Whole or in Part. By Radio Via American Radio News Corp. and Radiomarine Corp.)

Aboard Submarine Nautilus, Aug. 21—In a strong northeast wind and well within the Arctic ice pack, the Nautilus has been drifting and dodging heavy ice all day.

We prepared the superstructure and the ice drills for diving, but the rapid drifting and considerable swells made conditions which were entirely unsuitable for such trials.

Off to Pole

Sir Hubert Wilkins

We have drifted far south of the point we reached last night at 6 p. m. Greenwich time (1 p. m. Wednesday, E. D. T.), when we were brought to a standstill by the tightly packed, fairly heavy ice.

At 7 o'clock tonight (2 p. m. Thursday, E. D. T.) we are approximately at 80 degrees 30 minutes north latitude by 12 degrees east longitude (less than 700 miles from the North Pole).

The temperature is at the freezing point. As we drift we are swept occasionally by thick snow squalls, the hard flakes stinging the hands and faces of the men on deck.

We are keeping a constant watch. The heavy, drifting ice is our gravest danger. In fact, today we have faced as difficult conditions as we expect to encounter in our whole trip. Frequently we go ahead astern, avoiding the ice cakes which menace our propellers and horizontal rudders.

The ship's stern and stem received many hard knocks today. When it is necessary we can drop the stern until it is well under water, and then we can safely back the boat.

Going Down

The Nautilus

Moving forward we go very slowly. We are now prepared to submerge, but with the ice drifting rapidly it would be difficult to go just under and scrape bottom, so, while we are waiting for more favorable conditions for the first trials, we prepare our ice drills and adjust the spectographs for measuring light, and other scientific instruments.

If the weather clears we will make our first dive tomorrow under Arctic ice.

Our first tests will be but short dives. If these prove successful we shall make more, cautiously increasing the length of their duration.

We caught our last glimpse of Spitzbergen at 4 a. m. (Greenwich mean time) yesterday when we passed Prince Charles Foreland. Seven hours later we passed Amsterdam Island, the last land between us and the ice pack.

Cruising at eight knots with our starboard engine, we then turned north at 11 east longitude, heading for 81 north latitude, 15 east longitude, where we hoped to encounter the fringe of the ice pack.

The edge of the ice pack had been reported at that position by whalers who visited this region two weeks ago. But at 4:30 p. m., G. M. T., we sighted the outskirts of the pack at 80 degrees north latitude, 12 east longitude. It had apparently moved southward with the wind.

All through the day we had kept to our course against heavy snows and intermittent squalls that occasionally smothered the horizon. The wind turned a little easterly as we continued northward and the temperature fell. Soon the snow turned into tiny ice pellets which peppered our deck with a steady rat-tat-tat.

As the ice floes thickened we were obliged to vary our course to a zig-zag route, avoiding large cakes. This was most easy by our electrical steering gear.

LOTTERY NEWS UNDER BAN

Washington, Aug. 21 (AP)—The Associated Press, International News Service and the United Press have assured the Postoffice Department they will co-operate fully in its effort to free the mails of unlawful matter concerning sweepstakes lotteries.

The announcement was made today by Arch Coleman, acting postmaster general. It said:

"These news associations hereafter will not distribute to their members and clients matter relating to sweepstakes lotteries—either in stories or photographs—just as they always have refrained from handling matter relating to the numerous other kinds of foreign lotteries patronized by players in this country.

"The action of these national and international news gathering associations is to be commended. It is notice on their part that the newspapers they serve will not hereafter be supplied with information regarding the operation of foreign sweepstakes, and carries the hope that such information will not be obtained from any other source, reliable or otherwise, and attempted to be printed.

WALKER WELL, BUT HE'S SAD

Carlsbad, Czechoslovakia, Aug. 21 (AP)—Mayor Walker packed his grips for his trip to Prague today, sighing that no one in Carlsbad could play "The Sidewalks of New York."

"My only disappointment here," he said, "is that I have found nobody who could play 'The Sidewalks of New York.' They know our national anthem, but nobody knows our good old New York hit."

With his cure completed, the mayor is leaving on a tour which will take him to Budapest, Vienna and Paris before he leaves for home, with a stopover at Pilsen.

As Walker prepared to leave his hotel he vastly increased his popularity with the populace. After the band had struck up "The Star-Spangled Banner," he sent a message to the bandmaster asking him to play the Czech national anthem. The latter was nonplussed for a moment; for he said few foreigners ever asked for it.

Wilhelm's at Work

Doorn, Holland, Aug. 21—Wilhelm Hohenzollern is employing his knowledge of archaeology to direct the construction of a modern Olympia as it looked in the days of the Greek games, Gustave Oberlaender of Reading, Pa., supplied the funds.

Post, Gatty Sued By Legion Vets

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Aug. 21 (AP)—Papers in a civil suit started here against Wiley Post and Harold Gatty, round-the-world fliers, were on their way to Minneapolis today for service. The suit, alleging breach of contract, was filed by Roy L. Brecke, State American Legion commander, who says the fliers failed to appear at the state convention here Wednesday to speak to the crowd.

He added that they refused because the crowd was "too small."

Paralysis May Delay N. Y. School Opening

New York, Aug. 21 (INS)—Opening of the schools here on September 14 may be postponed if the infantile paralysis epidemic gains headway, Health Commissioner Shirley W. Wynne announced today.

In this city yesterday were reported five deaths and 60 new cases, a slight drop. This report brought the number of deaths for the year to 252 and the number of cases to 2261.

Baby Princess Given First Birthday Party

Glamis, Scotland, Aug. 21 (AP)—The baby of the British royal family, Princess Margaret Rose, saw her first birthday anniversary celebrated today by a doting circle of relatives.

She shared congratulations with Gerald Lascelles, younger son of Princess Mary, 7 years old today. The parents of Margaret Rose, the Duke and Duchess of York, and her five-year-old sister, Princess Elizabeth, and her nurse did the honors in Glamis Castle.

NATION BEARS HUGE COST OF DRY LAW

$2,660,000—Annual expenditures by 21 states for state police.

$52,786,075—Annual federal cost of administering criminal justice.

$1,260,000—Cost of Pennsylvania's private industrial police.

$10,000,000—Expenditure for private protective services in large cities.

$3,960,000—Paid annually for armored car service.

$850,500—Minimum for private correctional institutions.

$311,CEE—Paid for bullet proof glass annually.

$47,747,000—Average insured losses annually due to crimes.

$68,634,000—Estimated annual losses from fraudulent use of the mails.

$106,222,000—Paid annually for insurance against crime.

$40,000,000—Losses due to forgery each year.

$1,000,000—Installation of tear gas devices in banks.

$4,000,000—Paid annually for safes.

$87,000,000 — Possible losses to community of productive labor by imprisoned criminals.

$235,000,000—Possible loss to community of productive labor by 170,000 engaged in law enforcement work.

$159,000,000—Indicated magnitude of annual payroll for watchmen and similar guards.

Total $1,119,790,000.

Goldthwaite H. Dorr and Sidney P. Simpson, of New York bar, who engineered the study for the commission, asserted these figures were but fragmentary. It was "wholly impossible," they added, to make an accurate estimate of the total economic cost of criminality in the United States.

"RACKET" ESTIMATE

It was pointed out that the limitations of time and funds had balked even an estimate upon such huge levies as those extracted by organized bootlegging, extortion, racketeering, thefts of uninsured property, fraudulent bankruptcies, bucket-shops, and confidence games, ranging from the sale of "gold bricks" to fixing fights and races.

However, the findings actually set down in statistical form were said by the entire commission to "strikingly confirm the accuracy of the general belief that crime imposes a tremendous economic burden on the community."

"It should not require the dramatic effect of some lump-sum total figure," the commission said, "to emphasize the importance and necessity, from a purely economic standpoint, of dealing adequately with the problem of preventing crime and controlling the criminal."

Nevertheless, the 11 members made clear they did not advocate a reduction in the cost of crime through slicing the cost of law enforcement agencies. The commission asserted these costs were "of less economic importance than the losses inflicted by the criminal, so that it is much more important from an economic standpoint to increase the efficiency of the administration of criminal justice than to decrease its cost."

REMEDIES URGED

The commission recommended that "nation-wide thorough and scientific studies of racketeering and organized extortion should be made."

It also urged "the efficiency of police administration be increased to a level commensurate with the expenditures made for this service; that economy be effected in penal treatment through the use of probation and parole; that more money be spent on prosecution; that steps be taken for the suitable compensation of jurors and witnesses; and that encouragement be given waivers of trial by jury.

The Dorr-Simpson report, concluding that an investigation of racketeering would be "highly dangerous to the investigator," nevertheless, urged such an investigation be made.

"It can be said without fear of exaggeration," they asserted, "that the losses due to commercialized fraud and racketeering are enormous, and very probably exceed those due to any other form of crime."

The two experts hit out at the "amicable relationships" between organized crime and law enforcement officials, asserting this phase of racketeering was "especially acute in connection with prohibition enforcement."

Although naming no particular statutes, they recommended a thorough overhauling of the criminal codes to limit "the extent to which social control by means of the criminal law is attempted."

"It is clear, we think," the report said, "that the cost of enforcing the criminal law would be less if it did not attempt to forbid and punish acts participated in by large numbers of otherwise law-abiding citizens who do not regard such prohibited acts as 'criminal' except in a technical sense."

Boston Crime Costs $9.64 Per Capita; Second in U. S.

Washington, Aug. 21 (INS)—Administration of criminal justice in 300 cities, each of 25,000 population or more, cost each man, woman and child therein an average of $5.47 last year, the Wickersham Commission's report on "costs of crime" disclosed today.

Boston ranked second after Jersey City with $9.64. Washington was third with $9.21, and Philadelphia was fourth with $8.75.

The highest per capita rate was found in Jersey City, N. J., where it ran $11.30. The lowest was in Galesburg, Ill., where it was only $0.92.

FIGHTING PRIEST ON JOB

Fists Curb Chicago Gangsters

Chicago, Aug. 21 (AP)—Out in the West Side district around Western ave. and Roosevelt rd., where gunfires often are heard with the knife or the pistol, a fighting Irish priest has launched a one-man campaign to clean up the vice there.

He is the Rev. Matthew Canning, new pastor of the St. Charles Borromeo Catholic church. He has been in the parish only three months, but the hoodlums have learned that priestly fists can be just as hard as any other mitt.

"Do you want to get tough or do you want to go along?" is his sock question to undesirables.

"We'll go along, father," is the usual answer.

There have been a few instances, but not many. Father Canning disclosed, when he had to smash an ecclesiastic fist against a moolum jaw to get results.

The priest earned his way through college by giving boxing lessons.

"How can I sleep at night hearing the crack of pistols and knowing my boys and girls are out there in the street?" he replied, when asked to explain the why of his campaign.

"I have given the last sacrament to 12 murdered men and there were five killings here last week," he said.

"Tell the police? How could I keep the confidence of my boys and girls" But give me three good policemen of my choice and I'll clean up this district in no time."

The priest personally is feeding 31 indigent families at the church.

Dollar a Barrel Oil Near in Southwest

Oklahoma City, Aug. 21 (AP)—Dollar a barrel oil was awaited by producers in Oklahoma today on the basis of a prediction by Cicero I. Murray, oil representative of Governor W. H. Murray.

But that price was not forecast to apply to the east Texas field, where Governor Ross S. Sterling invoked martial law last Monday to curb production. Oil men throughout the Southwest believed an upset if Texas and Oklahoma wells remained closed much longer.

Manufacturers List Increased Business

Edward F. Budd Manufacturing Company officials said facilities of the plant are being taxed to the utmost to produce new dies, tools, jigs and fixtures required for new production in the fall and winter.

They reported the company during the last month obtained a substantial volume of new business.

And They Both Ran

ARE YOU GOING TO THE ITALIAN RIVIERA?

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., Aug. 21—What romantic vistas are immediately conjured up by that one little word . . . "Italy"!

Land of sunny skies . . . blue seas and smiling lakes . . . musical speech . . . and handsome faces . . . !

Italy is beautiful. Unforgettably so. It is a country for love and romance and happiness.

MAY CHRISTIE

Nowhere in the world have I seen handsomer men . . . more colorful scenes . . . or lovelier landscapes.

Or happier homes, with families knit close in the bonds of affection.

Italian marriages always strike me as particularly happy. An Italian husband marries "for life" . . . never with the idea of divorce in the background. So he chooses the girl of his heart, and around her he builds in a close-knit way his life and his aspirations. He is her lover as well as her husband all the way through . . . it is his pride to make her happy . . .

See Italy Via Motor Trip.

One of the best ways to see the Italian Riviera is to take a motor trip through the country.

The Young Man Who * * * and I started by car from Monte Carlo, driving along the edge of the Mediterrean past Mentone and the gloomy chateau of the famous Dr. Voronoff, who "rejuvenates" patients by the grafting of glands taken from his monkeys . . .

As we flew by I imagined I saw apes grin impishly in the dark, dark trees in his grounds . . . and ladies and gentlemen of uncertain years peer from the chateau's windows . . . !

"That's the result of last night's party at the Colombe d'Or," said my Young Man, laughing at me.

The Colombe d'Or being a merry inn high in the mountains.

The Italian frontier is half way up the long hill from Mentone and handsome carabinieri stop your car to have a look at you and your papers.

The moment you set foot in Italy, you notice at once the difference in good looks between the French and the Italians . . . in increasing ratio.

Hairpin Curves.

The carabinieri smile and bow from the waist with great courtesy, welcoming you into their country.

Our car . . . a fast-driving French chauffeur at the wheel . . . bounded along gaily. The scenery grew wilder and more picturesque. We were really in romantic Italy . . .

Up . . . up . . . and up . . . appalling hairpin curves, with nothing to prevent us from hurtling over!

Would that chauffeur ever sound his horn? Or slow down on the gravel curves? Nothing doing!

"Madame" . . . (with a graceful wave of the hand and turning round to beam on me) . . . "I have lived in Monte Carlo all my life . . . I could drive along these roads blin-fold!"

Well, it was heavenly just the same, even if I did expect to be playing a harp with the angels any minute . . .

We were high up in the mountains now. The Mediterranean shimmered far below us.

All day we drove along the Italian Riviera . . . through villages where the inhabitants had to illegally flatten themselves against the walls of the tall houses so that our car could pass . . . so narrow was their "Main Street!"

Houses United.

Arches across the road and over our heads united those houses that had gay mosaic patterns and pictures on the outside walls . . . dimmed to a beautiful mellowness by the passing of the centuries.

And every and anon we came upon happy peasants, eating their food and drinking their good wine in shady arbors along that enchanted roadside. Those quiet repasts "beneath their own vine and fig tree" were quite in accordance with the Scriptures, I thought.

We passed through the high, winding, cobbled streets of that famous seaport, Genoa.

Where I had landed from ships before, but never seen it properly.

We stayed for the night at a quaint little town beyond, where all the world and his wife were out in the open-air cafes in the cobbled main square listening to "O Sole Mio" sung by wandering minstrels. . . . They sipped their wines-of-the-countryside and gaily discussed the day's news . . .

Objects of intense interest were we in our big car. Italian peasants are frankly and unabashedly inquisitive about newcomers . . .

We rose early and after one of those breakfasts-under-the-vine in the open air, which gives you such an appetite, drove on to Rapallo . . .

Bit of Heaven.

Which in the early morning looked like a little bit of heaven dropped down beside the blue waters of the Mediterranean . . .

Cypress and olive trees, and sandalwood and pines clung to the edge of the mountains. It had rained overnight, and there was the clean, sweet smell of cedars.

About the pretty Italian villas on the hillside lay deep, fragrant gardens.

We stayed several days in Rapallo. It was such a gay, lovely little seaside town.

Full of handsome young men with shiny black hair and olive skins, and pretty, dark-eyed young women . . .

All very gaily arrayed and having a grand time . . . swimming and dancing and strolling and love-making!

We visited Porto Rico . . . (beautiful place to stay) . . . and on to that fashionable spot, Viareggio.

Where there are excellent hotels and lots of amusement . . . but to me the tiny Italian hamlets were the most fascinating spots of all.

On to Florence.

Florence at last—that city built on hills. We stayed in an old-world inn overlooking the Old Bridge . . . the "Ponte Vecchia."

The churches are beautiful beyond description . . . one of the peerless ones is the Duomo. It has tinted mosaics on its outside walls . . . is exquisite within . . . and is 600 years old!

This Way Out!

In one lovely little church in Florence, whose interior the Young Man Whoand I were appreciatively viewing, an old, old verger rose from his little desk and came toward us, bowing and smiling, but with a ruefulness in his greeting.

"Scusi! Scusi!" he whispered pointing to my sleeveless dress (the day was very hot), then to his lips, and with another apologetic bow, to the exit . . .

So please remember to wear long sleeves in Italian churches at all times . . . or you will be regretfully asked to leave . . .

Italy is a place to which I dream . . . a place in which to love . . . a land of poignant beauty.

But be sure to have the Right Person at your side . . . because it's a Honeymoon Country . . . !

COHASSET HORSE SHOW LURES SMART SET TO SOUTH SHORE

Dinners and Dances Add to Program

Lots and lots of nice people roamed about the enclosures and stands at the Cohasset Horse Show yesterday, as they will again today and tomorrow, and we could go on quite endlessly describing lovely sports clothes and handsome escorts, but there's not all the time and space that we'd like. However, we did spot several debs of the coming season, tearing around under the illusion that they should always be in a hurry. But they were very gay and seemed to be having a "swell" time, as all well-brought-up debbies should.

Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft were their usual charming and hospitable selves, seated in their box, which was continually filled with a laughing crowd of horse-lovers, Miss Jane and Hugh, Jr., coming and going as their heavy program of classes allowed. Another box that attracted attention by the gaiety of its members was that in which Mrs. Paul Moore, of North Beverly and Hollow Hill, N. J., and her charming daughters, the Misses Pauline and Fanny, held court. They also looked charming in their snappy little driving rigs, Mrs. Moore in dark red boucle dress and hat, and Miss Pauline in brown and pink.

Miss Martha Chapin, daughter of the John Chapins of Brookline and Cohasset, was seen talking and laughing with petite Miss "Kady" Johnson, probably about the dinner and who would escort them to it, before the Golf Club supper dance this evening. Vivacious and talented Miss Dorothea Dean, daughter of the James Deans, chatted with another deb, Miss Alma Bird. But even more interesting to us than those who are looking forward to a winter of rushing, are those who look back on it as part of a glorious past. And so we enjoyed chatting with Miss Mabel Bell, Miss Adelaide Rice, Miss Louise Farley and Miss Barbara Bremer, all post-debs now, with perhaps a rather empty looking winter ahead (unless they are enterprising).

Governor Ely to Speak

Governor's Day will be observed at Oak Bluffs, under the auspices of the Martha's Vineyard Camp Meeting Association, Saturday. Governor Ely is to review the work done during his administration in public works for the relief of unemployment.

Miss Thomas Weds Count

Miss Rosamond Wiltridge Thomas, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Douglas H. Thomas, was married to Count Edouard Opperdorff at Capri, Italy, yesterday.

The bride was given in marriage by her cousin, Ambassador John W. Garrett. Her sister, Miss Katherine Lyman Thomas, was maid of honor. The ceremony, which was held in the Cathedral in the Piazza, was followed by a reception by Ambassador and Mrs. Garrett at the villa San Michele.

Count Opperdorff is the son of Count Jean Georges Opperdorff and Princess Radziwill of Oberglogan, Upper Silesia. He served in the war as a lieutenant in the Prussian guard regiments.

The Count and Countess Opperdorff will visit this country in October, spending a short time in Boston, the former home of the Countess' mother, who was Miss Bessie Chadwick. Their future home will be in Paris.

Prince Is Pilot

Warsaw, Aug. 21—A prince of a pilot has landed here for an official visit. He is Nicholas, brother of King Carol of Rumania, and is chief of the Rumanian air service.

New Fall Hats in Novel Styles

By ANN ARDEN

ONE OF the sensations of a woman's life today is a new hat, for it is really new this season.

JUST ONE of the versions of the hat that tips down over the nose is simple in line and carries only the slightest amount of trimming, but it has a daring quality about it that is just too fascinating when it is rightly worn.

TRY ON some of these hats just to see how you look in them. They are inspired by the romantic era and certainly you will find your whole personality taking on a certain charm that you hardly guessed was there.

THEY ARE not for the young alone as you are bound to hear stated. They are most becoming to more mature types, and they certainly offer welcome variety and individuality. Trimming has the universal stamp of approval, not in any sense overdone, and when the trimming is of fur, it makes a most luxurious looking decoration.

THIS FALL everyone is going to have a chance to take a peep at new personalities for the hats will be so radically changed that all women are bound to look different from their old selves.

* * *

THE MATERIALS will be about the same—felt, woolen stuffs, braids etc. But the shapes are decidedly different. Try one of them and see if you like your new looks.

BRITISH BUDGET STILL GRIPPED IN DEADLOCK

By WILLIAM HILLMAN

London, Aug. 21 (US)—The Labor Cabinet today still faces the problem of an agreement with opposition leaders and the trades union congress on a program for balancing the budget, a necessary safeguard to British credit.

Serious differences exist between the cabinet's viewpoint and those of the Conservative and Liberal leaders. Even more important was the fact the cabinet was unable to win over a part of its own ranks. According to indications the general council of the Trades Union Congress is opposed to some of the proposals in the government's program.

A brief communique issued stated that the Trades delegates would report to the general council this morning. The cabinet also will reconvene today.

Conservative and Liberal leaders declare further inter-party conferences also will be essential.

LEAGUE HIT AS FRENCH AID

New York, Aug. 21 (AP)—Lord Beaverbrook, British newspaper publisher, termed the League of Nations "a branch of the French foreign office" upon his arrival today from Halifax.

He expressed the opinion England should retire from it "in build up its nationality" and declared the United States was better off outside the league.

Asked if he thought the Labor government would continue long in office, he said he hoped not, and that it was his guess the Conservatives would carry the next general election. As to the 10 per cent tariff suggested by the MacDonald ministry to balance the budget, he pronounced it a good idea "if true."

Couple, 80 and 86, to Rewed; Parted in 1897

Chicago, Aug. 21 (AP)—Wedding bells will ring once more tomorrow for Mrs. Emma Martin, 80, and Norville Williams, 86. They were married in 1863, but a disagreement led to a divorce in 1897 when their five children had families of their own.

Both remarried, the wife in 1914, and Williams in 1915. Mrs. Martin died two years ago. Williams' second wife died this year. Yesterday they obtained a license to wed.

"Our children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren brought us together again," Williams explained.

Salesman Held in Larceny

George L. Patten, 40, of Parsons st., West Newton, a salesman, was held in Newton district court on a charge of larceny of more than $500 from the Merchants Ad Service Company.

PLOT TO FIRE PRISON

ply reduce the population," he added, hinting at the machine and riot gun guard set up in the prison. "In Cherry Hill we have a number of nit-wits and agitators, but none of them are leaders."

Night guards remained on double duty today while 20 police with riot guns and tear bombs were in readiness at City sq. station.

More than 80 State troopers held themselves in readiness for an emergency call, and will be kept until all danger is over, Dr. Stearns said.

While the inmates, apparently reconciled to the failure of their demonstrations, lay quiet in their cells, there was no let-down in the precautionary measures in force. All night extra guards patrolled the cell blocks, carefully scrutinizing each cell. Other guards were secreted in the workshops against the possibility that a smoldering blaze, designed to break out during the night, may have been set during the day.

EXTRA RIOT GUNS

At City sq. station 50 extra riot guns, with a 1000 rounds of ammunition, awaited the possibility of violence. In the prison storeroom were two machine guns, cartridge belts in place, ready to be mounted on the walls at a moment's notice.

Capt. William Livingston of the City sq. station, with Superintendent Michael H. Crowley, toured the prison yard — "just," they explained, "so we'll know the layout if we're needed."

The various forces which would bear the brunt of an open insurrection had conferred, and stations were assigned to each.

The quiet which descended upon the prison yesterday after two days of clamorous protest, ostensibly against bad food, was regarded with apprehension by Warden Hogsett.

EXPECTS TROUBLE

"There will be trouble sooner or later," he declared. "This is only a lull in the storm. This thing has been smoldering too long to die out so abruptly."

The warden today was weighing the advisability of cancelling the regular Saturday half-holiday and ball game inside the prison walls. If there is no futher "yammering" or uproar the usual extra yard liberty will be granted. If there is a recurrence of the disorders of the turmoil of Tuesday and Wednesday, the prisoners will be held in close confinement all day.

Nine alleged leaders of the convict uprising were still in solitary, and other regarded as their lieutenants were under close surveillance.

Heads of all defensive units massed against a violent demonstration conferred at the State House and drew up a plan of campaign. At the conference were Warden Hogsett, Police Commissioner Hultman, Superintendent Crowley, Capt. Livingston, Col. Paul J. Norton, acting commissioner of public safety, Capt. Thomas Bligh, head of the State police, and Lieut. Thomas Mitchell, acting commander of the State patrol at the State House.

WARDEN IN FULL CHARGE

The following statement was issued after the session:

"The situation in regard to meeting emergencies which might arise at the State prison in Charlestown was thoroughly discussed. It was agreed that in view of the opinion of the assistant attorney-general, Stephen Bacigalupo, and Leo Schwartz, legal adviser to the police commissioner, that in accordance with the provision of the General Laws of the Commonwealth, the warden of the State prison is in charge and in custody of the State prison in Charlestown, therefore, the work of the Boston police department must be that of co-operating with the State authorities in case emergencies arise at the State prison.

"In case of emergency, the warden will notify the officer in charge of Division 15, that officer shall at once notify the superintendant of police; thereupon the officer in charge will immediately despatch to the warden's office such officers as are available properly armed, who will report for emergency under the direction of the warden, and any other members of the force that are sent to the State prison to cope with the emergency will report and obey the orders of the warden.

DETAILS LISTED

"For the present condition, the following officers are detailed to Division 15: Two sergeants and 18 patrolmen, No. 1 platoon, with hours from 7:45 a. m. to 6 p. m.; two sergeants and 18 patrolmen, No. 2 platoon, with hours from 5:45 p. m. to 1 a. m; two sergeants and 16 patrolmen, No. 3 platoon, with hours from 12:45 a. m. to 8 a. m.

"Officers on this detail will be held in the station house subject to call. Night officers on this detail will not sleep while on duty. They will be ready in an instant to respond to any call of emergency.

"Division commanders will understand that all officers on this detail will be selected from the riot gun battalion. In case more officers are needed on an emergency, the officer in command of each station will select men from the riot gun battalion list."

MAE CLARKE TO GET ROLE IN "FRANKENSTEIN"

Carl Laemmle, Jr., Has Ambitious Program for Universal

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Universal Service Motion Picture Editor.

Copyright, 1931, by Universal Service, Inc.

Los Angeles, Aug. 21—The responsibilities on young Carl Laemmle's shoulders, instead of wearing him down, seem to be giving him an added stimulus. I sat next to him at a dinner the other night and I never heard such plans in my life. Junior is determined not to make any mediocre pictures. Universal's productions must be out of the ordinary or else he won't make them. Colin Clive, the good looking Englishman who made such a hit with both the men and women in "Journey's End," has arrived in town and is in daily conference with Junior over his part in "Frankenstein."

Louella O. Parsons

"Dracula," a sort of companion piece to "Frankenstein," has been doing a big business wherever it has been shown and "Frankenstein" will be equally daring. Mae Clarke, because of her work in "Waterloo Bridge," has been signed to play opposite Mr. Clive. She is one of the players junior expects to exploit.

* * *

Now is the time for newcomers to break into the movies. That is, newcomers who have had stage experience. One picture is sufficient to establish a player. A few years ago months of intensive exploitation were necessary and one picture, no matter how good, merely served as a stepping stone. Today everything is different. That is why so many stage players are coming to Hollywood. Wallace Ford, a New York stage actor who played on the stage here in "Bad Girl," has just signed a contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Clarence Brown saw him on the stage and signed him pronto. Now M.-G.-M. is starting him off with Clarence Brown as his director in Joan Crawford's picture "Mirage." He plays one of the leading male roles and that gift to women, Clark Gable has the other lead.

"Pick Up" Cast

That big fisherman, George Archainbaud, who is striving for the record of Malibu and Santa Monica, will have to give up his hobby now and go back to work. Too bad! George has to get busy on "Pick Up," Louis Weitzenkorn's story. Perhaps he won't mind getting busy since he has been given an unusually good cast. Robert Ames, Hollywood's favorite playboy, Ricardo Cortez, screen villain, and Mary Astor compose the interesting group gathered by Radio for the Weitzenkorn picture. RKO-Pathe happens to own the title "Pick Up" so Mr. Weitzenkorn will have to find another name for his story, an original which he dashed off for the screen. He was the author of "Five Star Final."

Mary Astor

Seen and Heard:

All Hollywood will look with interest at Herbert Marshall when he reaches here. He is the husband who made Edna Best turn back on the movies and flee to New York. Even Jack Gilbert couldn't keep her here. She decided she was homesick and without saying a word to anyone, took herself back to friend husband in New York. Now that he is coming out here everyone is wondering if she will come with him. "David Harum," filmed in 1915 was taken out of the vault this week and given a special showing. Paramount produced it and Fox may buy the screen rights for Will Rogers.

Salaries are the big question at the moment. There is little doubt that new contracts are not made with nearly as large figures as they were a year ago. Leslie Howard, splendid actor, refused to sign a contract when the best he could do was a much lower salary than his present contract calls for. He has gone to Europe to forget movies and when he returns he will appear in a Philip Barry play. Adolphe Menjou, who has never had so many good pictures, "Front Page," and others, wasn't signed again. Answer, salary! Same is true of William Haines.

The name "Culbertson" has become a nuisance to some people in Hollywood. Most of the intricate plays are laid down to the Culbertson system. If you don't play Culbertson in Hollywood you might as well give up bridge. The other night Richard Barthelmess and Edwin Knopf were playing with two of Hollywood's best feminine bridge players. After losing several hands, one of the ladies said to Dick: "Now, if you played Culbertson you needn't have gone down." "But we play Michaelson," said Edwin Knopf, with a twinkle in his eye. "Don't we Dick?" Michaelson, a fake character, soon entered into the game with as much vengeance as Culbertson. Every poor play made by the fair opponents was laid down to their inability to follow Michaelson.

Snapshots of Hollywood

CARL LAEMMLE, JR., after two weeks of strenuous tennis, adding five pounds. The ZANUCK nursery all ready and waiting for the arrival of an occupant. ALEX MARQUIS, one of the captains at the Brown Derby, getting complimented on the acting ability of MARGARET MARQUIS, his daughter. She plays one of the leading roles in "Penrod." JAMES GVIATT host to a dinner party. EILEEN PERCY guest of honor. KATHLYN WILLIAMS sunning herself on the bench in front of POLA NEGRI'S house. ALLEN LANE, handsome young juvenile, devoting himself to ELSIE JANIS. GUTHRIE McCLINTOCK, husband of KATHERINE CORNELL and good friend of RUTH CHATTERTON, deep in an argument over her next picture. He directs her. NORMA TALMADGE, wearing a smart creation of chartreuse satin with hat to match and brown bag and shoes, lunching at the Embassy. That's all today. See you tomorrow!

GANG CHIEF IN TOWN

Edward G. Robinson, famous for his underworld characterizations in the movies, appears at the RKO Keith-Boston in person for a week, beginning tomorrow.

Sunkist Scion

Harold Moore

Harold Moore is the baritone featured over the air and on the stage of the Metropolitan. Moore is a native of California and a graduate of the University of California. He will also be remembered as the young man who introduced the popular song "Trees," by Joyce Kilmer. Seated in the front row, second from your right, is Harold, playing one of those large tenor saxophones, which he quickly sets aside for his clarinet or for whatever instrument Horace Heidt calls during the presentation of his novel arrangements. Harold receives more fan mail than any of the other boys in the band.

The Public Knows

Ina Claire, who stars in "Rebound" at the RKO, claims the distinction of never having appeared in a play that was a failure. The formula for such an achievement, Miss Claire explains, lies not so much in the judgment of plays as in the judgment of audiences by a star.

"Every year I receive from 1500 to 2000 plays," says Miss Claire. "It seems that virtually everyone thinks he could write a play if he had the time. There are plenty of plays, but there is just one public, and that public must be pleased."

"The Cheat"

Irving Pichel has arrived in New York from Hollywood to start work with Tallulah Bankhead in "The Cheat" at Paramount's East Coast studio. Pichel, former leader of the Little Theater movement in California and the Middle West, has not been East since he left nine years ago to make his home on the West Coast.

"Huckleberry Finn" at Fenway Tomorrow

"Huckleberry Finn," adapted from the immortal story by Mark Twain, will be featured on the screen at the Fenway tomorrow. The cast has Jackie Coogan, Junior Durkin, Mitzi Green, Jackie Searle, Eugene Pallette and Oscar Apfel. This new Twain picture-story carries on the adventures of the boys of "Tom Sawyer."

"The Thirteenth Chair"

"The Thirteenth Chair," an original story by Louis Sarecky, associate producer at the Radio Pictures studio, will be moved up a month on schedule.

Director Gives Paris Razz to Hollywood

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Dana Clair, author of "Under the Roofs of Paris," starring Albert Prejean and Pola Illery, has given the "raze" reply to Hollywood's effort to lure him from Paris. When George Kraska first screened the magnificent concocted film at the Fine Arts, we wrote that the Clair technique would prove a first aid treatment to Hollywood direction, along with the German and Russian "mug" mastery. Clair received an offer recently, tossed it over in his mind, and replied in effect that he preferred to "hose his own" productions rather than become a slave to Hollywood limitations of directors. Clair's first picture to be shown in America proved so popular that Kraska has brought it back for a second screening.

Pola Illery

SWEET APPEAL

Greta Nissen is all charm in "Transatlantic," at the Scollay, Sunday.

"Through the Window"

Kay Francis, Paramount featured player, has been assigned the leading feminine role in "Through the Window," an original murder mystery story by Martin Flavin. William Boyd will play with Miss Francis and Marion Gering will direct.

'UNEMS' FOR 'IDLE' MAY AVOID INSULT

—By Gilbert Seldes—

THE COMPLACENT ATTITUDE of Chairman Fayne, of the Red Cross, led me to object to the use of the word "idle" when applied to men and women who are willing to work and unable to find work. Commenting on the word, Mr. Franklin P. Adams connects it properly with the necessity for short terms in headlines and suggests that at least the unemployed be called "idled"—that is, people forced to be idle. If we were in Russia they would probably be known as the UN-EM, but, of course, if we were in Russia, we would not confess that there were any.

GILBERT SELDES

Not only the implied insult to the willing worker makes the term "idle" so objectionable. It is the attitude of the man who uses the word which is dangerous. To any "idle" today, after a century in which the idle classes have been called everything from parasites to tramps, is to throw ourselves forcibly back into the past, and to let our minds "idle" over the pleasing prospect of the full dinner pail.

So long as we say "idle" we defend ourselves, our government, our political parties, our industrial leaders, from any responsibility in throwing it on the anonymous and pathetic shoulders of starving men and women. "Unemployed" is a long ugly word, but its implications are correct.

The Guilty Poor

Consider, for a moment, a parallel situation. During the war the question of responsibility was automatically solved for us; the enemy, and the enemy alone, was responsible, and our only intellectual entertainment was in devising the exact mathematical ratio between Germany and Austria; the Germans had more fun because they had more enemies. But as soon as the Treaty of Versailles was signed, and Germany was compelled to admit complete and sole responsibility, the process of revision began. No one now accepts the principle of exclusiveness; the abyss of war-guilt was wide enough and deep enough to engulf the world.

I suppose there are people now who believe that the poor, unskilled workers, the ignorant, are as guilty as their masters in the present depression. The poor bred too fast, no doubt, and demanded good wages and an "American standard" of living—upon which the ruling classes prided themselves, to which they turned as a bulwark against revolution. But in spite of appearances some common sense does exist, and common sense says that the victims of our disaster are the innocent, and that the guilty, who are suffering less cannot entirely wash their hands of the misery they have—no doubt unwillingly—caused.

No Personal Devil

Another parallel from the war ought to be a warning; the hue and cry for a personal devil, usually the Kaiser on our side, and Sir Edward Grey in the eyes of the Germans, was silly. Single individuals acted stupidly, or even viciously, but no single individual was powerful enough to launch the terrific forces of the war. So, today, no speculator deliberately playing the market could have done more than create a Wall Street panic; he could not make a depression (which was, in actual fact, in existence before the crash came). The desires and ambitions of the whole world created this mockery of its hopes. But the world is ruled by human beings; the pace of getting money is set at the top; the unwillingness to do with little is sharpened and aggravated by the vast possibility of having even too much.

The government which failed to protect, the industries which failed to foresee, have a great deal to answer for; the least they can do is to treat with respect their victims. Among other things they can do—one has been suggested and been met with strange cries of anguish—that is, put the victims to work. So far, it is all the victims ask. So far . . .

Other Men's Ideas

From Roark Bradford's forthcoming "John Henry"; Harper's:

"The night John Henry was born the earth trembled like a leaf. Panthers squalled in the brake like a baby, and the Mississippi river ran upstream a thousand miles. John Henry weighed 44 pounds. He came into the world with a cotton-hook for a right hand and a river song on his tongue.

And John Henry stood up in the middle of the floor and he told them what he wanted to eat.

"'Bring me four ham-bones and a pot full of cabbages,' he said. 'Bring me a batt of turnip greens tree-top tall, and season hit down wid a side er middlin'. Bring me a pone er cole cawn bread and some hot potlicker to wash hit down. Bring me two hog jowls and a kittelful er whippo-will peas. Bring me a skillerful er red-hot biscuits and a big jugful er cane molasses. 'Cause my name is John Henry and I'll see you soon.'

"So John Henry walked out of the housse and away from the Black River country, where all good rousterbouts are born."

Ambition

In youth he had visions of life at sea,
A gold-braided admiral he would be.
Strutting the deck where the wind blew free.
And defying the wildest storm.
The dreams he dreamed in the long ago
Were lost in adversity's ebb and flow,
But he struts in front of a movie show
In an admiral's uniform.

Failures

Dolt he is who weaves a verse.
Dullard who attends an art.
He will find within his purse
A broken heart.

He who leaves the given way
Following a starry cross—
Pity him, for he will pay
In bitter loss

Wilfred J. Funk.

"My dear wife, you have a fine life ahead of you—I've been happily married seven times, so I ought to know."

Fire!

By Jakob Wassermann

NOTHING IMPRESSES the human imagination more vividly than a conflagration. Looking at it, destruction becomes something real and actual, the fury of the elements, the power of evil, and bound up with it, too, is the idea of purification, the separation of the unclean, the melting away of what is hard or defiant, the sublimation of the material, the symbol of atonement.

The destruction by fire of the Glaspalast in Munich has almost entirely wiped out the pictorial witness to a particular period of German life and culture. It is one of the thousand signs of these queer times we live in that, apart from those professionally interested, nobody has been deeply moved by the catastrophe. Not even the poets and artists who, nauseated by the wild and banal events of our day, pursue their ways in the realms of the unseen. It is impossible for such a loss as this to arouse the same grief today as it would have done 20 years ago. Is the loss, then, less great, has the possession of noble works of art and culture become of less importance? Not at all.

Have the serious-minded men, in whom the conscience of the time is alive, grown more indifferent or less sensitive? Not in the least.

I would go so far as to say that, so far as seriousness, reverence and veneration are concerned, nothing has changed.

And yet, under the tremendous pressure of world events and catastrophies, our attitude toward such high works of art has altered. Neither they nor we have grown stale or unclean. But in the unholy confusion in which we live it is denied us "to take our pleasure in their sacred worth." It is bitter to have to recognize this, but we must come to terms with it—that is, we must make it bear fruit, if we do not wish to appear "worthless" in the eyes of those who come after us.

The case is different when it comes to the destruction of works by living or (more terrible still) of recently deceased artists. Here sympathy turns from the general to the particular.

For instance there is the now elderly Swiss artist, Meister Amiel, who has seen almost his whole life's work destroyed and yet—what a significant spectacle!—turns to his despairing admirers and disciples a serene countenance, spendidly unmoved by fate. A wonderful example of the fact that great characters have not yet died out, and that they can stand the test of a great trial no less heroically than in mythical epochs.

It is an incomprehensible harshness of fate that the four latest and most mature works of the Austrian painter, Faistauer, who was suddenly carried off in the dawn of his artistic power, should be burned like so many rags, the irreplacable witnesses of a rise to fame—irreplaceable because the hand no longer lives which could renew them. Such a loss engenders a ghostly kind of grief, as though one were forced to watch a soul being murdered and a morsel of immortality destroyed,

Murder at Home

—By Deems Taylor—

WE HAD A MURDER at our house the other day. Not precisely in the house, and not really our murder. Nevertheless, murder drew close enough for us to have a fair look at it, to realize that people do meet violent death at the hands of other people elsewhere than in the pages of newspapers. Also, we had a momentary glimpse of the Negro race. I have not yet quite digested either experience. I don't know, for instance, why the murder should have become a trifle comic nor why the other glimpse should have revealed a yawning abyss.

C. H. Towne

This is what happened: At an ungodly hour of the morning Mattie knocked. I swam reluctantly to consciousness.

It was the telephone, Mattie explained, and it said it was important.

The voice on the wire demanded: 'Will you pay for this call?'

'Who is it?'

'Blank's Undertaking Parlor, New York."

Now most of us, I imagine, still skip a heart beat when the telephone announces itself as a telegram. But until you have had a person-to-person call from an undertaker you simply don't know what suspense is. I said I would pay.

Character in Talk

Whereupon, a mild, slightly embarrassed voice remarked, "Mr. Taylor? This is Emma, Mattie's sister. My husband got killed. Can I speak to Mattie?'

I found Mattie, who was not very far away, and gave her the receiver. I hereby make no apologies whatsoever for having eavesdropped the following conversation:

'Hello, honey." (Short pause.)

(In a tone of intense surprise.) "Oh, yeah? He did? Who killed him?"

(Brief pause.) "Oh, yeah?"

(Pause.) "How'd they kill him? Shoot him or cut him?"

(Indignantly.) 'He did, did he? Now ain't that too bad?"

(Interlude.) "You did. Now ain't that too bad?"

(Long interlude.) "Well, honey, I'll see what I can do. I'll have to let you know. Good-bye, honey."

She told me about it. "The roomer killed my brother-in-law. Yessir, last night he killed him. He cut him all up. They was drinking a little too much, I guess. They got to arguing and then they got to quarreling. And the roomer cut him. My sister was saying it was lucky she didn't get killed herself. She got between them and tried to stop them, but she couldn't. She just got outer it.

"Yessir, she sure to sad about it. But it ain't as if he was a very good man. He sure made a lot of trouble for her. He cut her two years ago Cut her right bad. She was in the hospital for a month. And last year he threw a lighted lamp at her and put her in the hospital again."

Good Riddance

Mattie looked grave. "She a awfully upset about one thing, though. She don't know how she a going to bury him. She ain't got a cent of insurance. You see, he was right careless about keeping up his insurance. Most of the time she had to pay it herself. And just this month she let it go just to teach him a lesson. And now he's killed and she ain't got a cent of it.

"Yes, sir, it is pretty terrible for her. I'm kind of upset myself. You see, my daughter was there, too. She was up there visiting them and saw the whole thing, and now she's got to go to court as a witness. It's too bad for her. She was having such a nice vacation."

She smiled. "It's funny, ain't it? Here he was, making all that trouble and all the time telling Emma he was going to kill her. And now he's gone and got killed himself. And she's all right. That is, except the insurance money."

She turned to go. "Yessir, I sure was scared when you said that undertaker wanted to speak to me. I thought maybe something had happened to my son."

I wonder if we understand them as completely as we think we do.

THIS IS LIFE

STATE AND CITY TURN BACK TO DARK AGE IN CITIZEN PLAN

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

KING AUBERON OF ENGLAND, in the year 2000, pretended that it would be a good thing to revive the medieval loyalties. He ordered the boroughs of London to throw up walls around each section and dig moats outside the walls. The boroughs, Bayswater, Clapham, Kensington, Notting Hill, guarded their draw-bridges and portcullises with armed soldiers, in medieval armor, with tabards and heraldic insignia and lances and banderols. The boroughs exchanged passports, and there was a customs house at every suburb gate. And woe with the inhabitant of Bayswater found plying his trade in Notting Hill!

ROBERT E. ROGERS

What did it lead to? It led to war, with the foolish little suburbs all Londons fighting to the death, all because a young fanatic took the king's joke seriously, and mixed up loyalty and jealousy, and somehow got it into his head that love of country or district must necessarily involve hatred and particularism and exclusion. And Notting Hill, that had tried to lord it over the other little suburbs, went down to defeat and humiliation.

Dark Age Tactics Today

That is, briefly, the story of "The Napoleon of Notting Hill,' one of the finest romances of that great Catholic romancer and philosopher, Gilbert K. Chesterton. Somebody ought to present a copy of the work to each of several of our local statesmen, particularly Councilman Dowd of the Boston City Council and Councillor Brennan of the Governor's Council.

It is rather absurd and distressing to see the particularism of a hundred years ago, of the dark ages, of the twilight of the ancient world, creeping back upon us in the 20th century.

The universal lesson of history is that particularism makes for jealousy, hatred, misunderstanding, war. Quite as important, it usually has made for economic incompetence and loss of opportunity.

It was the jealousy and particularism of the 13 states after the Revolution that ruined the Confederation. They made the situation so impossible that the wise men saw that, if the newly created Republic were not to be pulled to pieces by sheer jealousy and ignorance, a Federal state would have to be created. The Constitution saved the day, but even that was so hampered by state jealousy that we have, without question, a less efficient and frictionless government than otherwise we might have had.

Injury to the State

Napoleon I was able to destroy the Germany of his day so easily because, although the Germans were a great civilization, with the same language and culture, they were split up politically into several hundred states, most of them no bigger than a pocket handkerchief, but each of them with a standing army and a tariff and customs barrier, passport regulations, secret police, and all the rest. Today they would have in addition Bertillon measurements and finger printing to register all aliens.

Napoleon smashed that Germany and then sensibly started putting it together. Bismarck finished the job, and after 1870 the German Empire faced the world with confidence.

As far back as you go in the world's history you will find timid and ignorant people trying to shut themselves off from the outer world, putting up walls (like the Great Wall of China), banishing aliens or allowing them in only under heavy penalties, discouraging business with their neighbors, and all the rest of it. And those times were unprogressive, narrow, poverty-stricken times in comparison with ours.

On the same front page yesterday we learned that one local statesman had succeeded in getting competent and experienced nurses fired from the City Hospital because they were not full-fledged citizens, and another local statesman was prominent in barring out-of-state contractors from Massachusetts jobs, even though their bids were lower.

If this policy becomes the policy of Massachusetts, as it very well may if certain present influences become paramount, I can think of nothing more likely to make for incompetence, inefficiency, stagnation and bad business.

The People Will Suffer

One of the reasons for the high quality of the teaching in the Boston schools has been that Boston has steadily refused to bar all non-Boston teacher-candidates in the interests of her own young people. The result has been a reasonable state of competition and efficiency. If a law were to be passed that all teachers and all nurses, for instance, drawing salaries in Boston, must be Boston born and bred, there is no doubt in the world that the quality of our teaching and nursing would slump. Competition is the mother of efficiency.

Similarly, if Boston business men got into the habit of knowing that they would have no outside competition in their bids, we should have higher bids, more expensive jobs and less efficient work.

And yet, to restrict Boston jobs and contracts to Boston residents would be only one step farther on this road to foolishness that is now barring Massachusetts jobs and contracts to all but Massachusetts citizens. Massachusetts is one of the richest and busiest states in the Union. She has won to that eminence against many natural and geographical drawbacks. And she has won to it on the principle of free competition.

There are already sufficient regulations to take care of out-of-state professional men and women who come to work for us. The fact that we have allowed them in freely has kept our own people on their toes, so that Massachusetts' personnel is among the finest in the country.

Mayor Curley showed in his letter that he recognized the injustice and the bad policy of such a law as exists on our statute books when it applies to expert professional people. Lieut.-Gov. Youngman recognized the economic folly of barring out-of-state contractors. The conception is antiquated and disproved. In the long run even the people who get jobs and contracts will suffer for living in a state so crab-like in its public policy.

PROBING POOR FOOD AT CITY HOSPITAL

Councilman Kelley, in Sickbed, Is Aroused by Dish of Spoiled Berries

From his sick bed in City Hospital, City Councillor Francis E. Kelley of Dorchester today directed a probe of food conditions that he previously had planned to inaugurate in the City Council.

Kelley, who is recovering from an appendicitis operation said today he was moved to act without further delay because of a dish of blueberries shown him last night by a hospital orderly. He claimed the berries had spoiled.

"A member of the council hospital committee, he called Dr. John J. Dowling, superintendent, for an immediate account on such conditions and Dr. Dowling assigned Dr. C. H. Pelton to the inquiry

"I intend to see that the help is fed like human beings," Kelley said today.

"I do not blame Dr. Dowling and the trustees for the conditions, but I do blame the dealers and those who check the food as it comes in.

"I feel there may even be collusion there somewhere.

"The food fed to patients is all right, but some of that given the help is terrible.

"The orderlies get $16.50 a week and scrubwomen $12 a week and three meals a day. Half of them have to eat outside, I hear, and they can't afford it."

Dr. Dowling promised every cooperation to Councillor Kelley blaming conditions on the big bulk of business that has to be handled

Mrs. Carstairs Welcomes Fanchon to Her Home as Evelyn Howard

"You're not really Evelyn Howard—you can't be!" beautiful woman had said.

What Has Gone Before

Leaving Hawaii shortly after her father's death, young and beautiful Fanchon Meredith goes to San Francisco, where she meets and loves a handsome man named Tony. Fanchon is shocked to learn that Tony is a racketeer, implicated in a recent murder. She, too, is now wanted. Fanchon escapes in an airplane under the name of "Smith." Evelyn Howard, whom she had met on the boat coming from Hawaii, is aboard. Evelyn is en route to New York to live with her aunt, the wealthy Mrs Carstairs, whom she has never met. After Fanchon confides in Evelyn, the latter treats her coolly. The plane crashes and Fanchon is the only survivor. She decides to escape Tony and the past and start life anew by masquerading as Evelyn. She starts for New York to meet Mrs. Carstairs.

Now Go On With The Story

CHAPTER IX

FANCHON TOLD the reporters [illegible] Smith" say that she had no living rel[illegible] know her given name; had never heard

One reporter mentioned carelessly [illegible]rl had died [illegible] an hour or so before they had boarded Fanchon's [illegible]

Fanchon's eyes filled with nervous tears. Dead Evelyn Howard constituted no danger for her. Living, she would have been a perpetual menace. Dead, Fanchon could remember that she had been young, that she had loved life, that she had looked forward with eagerness to what life was to hold for her. Dead, Fanchon could forget that in Fanchon's own trouble Evelyn Howard had been cold, unkind and condemnatory. Dead Fanchon could forget that Evelyn had refused to help her—and had branded her—without words a gangster's girl . . . a girl that one "didn't know," whom one couldn't "afford" to know.

Dead, Evelyn Howard was free; and her death made Fanchon free.

The reporters left, apologizing pleasantly, hurrying back with their news, "Sole Survivor a Story of Plane Crash which Killed Seven." they would pick out on their keys. It would presently be flashed over the wires of the Associated Press.

The train moved on. Fanchon leaned her head against the dusty plush cushions and closed her eyes. She couldn't go back now. She had irrevocably committed herself. There was nothing to do but permit herself to be carried on—and on . . . and eventually to step off the train into whatever destiny awaited her

She found herself speculating upon Mrs. Carstairs' son Colin. Upon the reason why Evelyn had not mentioned him to her. It would have been more natural had Evelyn mentioned him, more in keeping with Evelyn's character. Evelyn had been more than a little casie conscious when it came to Jean Carstairs [illegible] had been more than a little proud, more than a little anxious to impress upon Fanchon [illegible] and boasted wonders of Mrs Carstairs' social position and money Of the woman herself she had had little to say. [illegible] was also natural as she had never known her. But she had not spoken of the son at all This seemed extraordinarily strange to Fanchon, thinking over as it would have been the most comprehensible thing in the world for Evelyn to have mentioned this "eligible" young man big game hunter, the polo player

Why then, had she been silent?

The train pulled in at the station. Stood, panting and throbbing Fanchon gathered her few belongings and she thought, wearily, stolen between resentment and moved with the passengers toward the platform Some of them looked at her curiously. All looked at her whether curiously or kindly. One woman spoke to her, saying something breathless and hurried about . . . dreadful accident—fortunate escape . . . great interest . . . People drew aside to let her pass, whispered among themselves, Everyone knew, then. There might be more reporters waiting. The old sense of being hunted, the cold panic seized her again. She was conscious of hysterical desire to laugh . . . [illegible]—shrilly . . . If the reporters, eager, intent and courteous [illegible] there at that big station, [illegible] ing there in the drawing room [illegible] known, as they questioned her, that it was not alone the "sole survivor" who answered them Who replied weakly

EXCESSIVE FAT LAID BY DR. WYNNE TO OVEREATING

Second Day's Suggested Menus for Safe and Sane Reducing Are Offered

Want to know why you're overweight?

Health Commissioner Shirley W. Wynne of New York says it's like this. Fat is normal for all healthy animals. Back a million years or so ago, when man was living among the tall trees he never knew when his next meal would be.

So wise nature provided fat as a means of storing up food where it couldn't spoil during the flush times.

The only trouble today, Dr. Wynne explained half humorously, is that man eats every day.

NO LEAN SEASON

"But," remarked Dr. Wynne, "his body keeps on storing up fat, and there's no lean season to take it off. Consequently man, if he eats unwisely, just keeps on getting fatter and fatter. Of course I'm using the word 'man' in its general sense," he smiled. "The same thing applies to women."

That's how it happens.

Moral—Don't eat too much.

Moral number two—If you already have, now's the time for a lean season.

But remember that animals just lie around in a kind of coma when they're not eating, so they can get away with a leaner season than you can. You can't afford to weaken yourself.

So use the table of weights and exercise numbers given by Dr. Wynne's diet, and don't try to lose more than a quarter of a pound a day. Faster reduction than that isn't safe.

BALANCED DIET

Keep in mind, too, when you get to making up your own menus from the foods that Dr. Wynne is using in the diet he has prepared for Evening American readers, that your diet MUST INCLUDE MILK, LEAFY VEGETABLES and FRUIT.

Here's the table of proper weights and the reduction key numbers, which show you how many calories your reducing diet should contain, according to the amount of exercise you take:

Second Day Menu

Commissioner Wynne's second day's menu, allowing 1,200 calories per day, follows:

BREAKFAST—½ small grapefruit..... 50 calories
Breakfast cereal (with 1 teaspoon sugar and ½ glass milk).....175 calories
¼ glass of milk (not cream) for coffee..... 25 calories
Coffee (without sugar)

MID-MORNING—1 glass of milk.....100 calories (the milk from the lower half of the bottle)

LUNCH—Cottage cheese salad with cole slaw and watercress .....100 calories
(3 tablespoons of cheese
½ cup of cole slaw)
1 French Roll.....100 calories
Fresh berries (about 1 cup) with ¼ glass of milk
—no sugar .....125 calories

Diet No. 2

DINNER—Unthickened cream of tomato soup (⅔ of a cup).....100 calories
Medium serving of filet of sole (with lemon).....250 calories
½ cup of spinach..... 25 calories
½ baked potato..... 50 calories
Fruit salad (½ cup of fruit and ½ tbsp. French dressing).....100 calories
Iced tea (lemon, no sugar)

15 if you take no exercise.
17 if you take light exercise
19 if you take moderate exercise.
22 if you do muscular labor
25 if you do severe labor

You then have the number of calories for your daily food requirements if you were not overweight.

From this number subtract 1000 calories—and you have your proper reducing diet. A safe reducing diet provides for you to use 1000 calories a day for the fat stored in your body.

IF THERE'S A WILL

HELEN AND BOB LEFT ON THE SAME TRAIN

"I APPRECIATE the offer, Mr. Benson. I realize that its an opportunity that won't come again but I just can't do it. I can't leave New York."

Bob Carman stopped speaking and for a moment Richard Benson, head of the Benson Products Co., didn't answer. He seemed losts in thought as he tapped his desk with a pencil. Finally he spoke.

"I'm sorry, too," he said. "We need a good man in charge of the Chicago office and I thought you would jump at the chance to go out there. It would mean an increase in salary, for one thing. But it can wait for a week or so. You think it over and give me your final answer on Saturday.

After Bob had left his office, Mr. Benson sat thinking. He had been disappointed at Bob's refusal. Another man in the office, he knew, would have jumped at the chance. But he didn't want any man—he wanted Bob. Conditions in the Chicago office were steadily getting worse, sales were falling off and Bob was needed there.

What was the reason Bob wouldn't go? Mr. Benson pondered the question in his mind. He had a keen mind, an analytical mind and he understood men. Otherwise he wouldn't have risen to where he was. Suddenly he picked up the telephone and called the office manager.

Carmen's Girl
Bess Holds a Quiz

"Look here, Todd," he said abruptly when the office manager entered, "has young Carman got a girl in this office?"

"I don't know what you mean, Mr. Benson," replied Todd, surprised by the abruptness of the question.

"I mean is there any girl in this office he's in love with. That's plain enough, isn't it? You ought to know what's going on. Those things can't be kept secret."

Todd thought for a moment. Then he shook his head.

"I don't think so, Mr. Benson," he said. "None that I know of, anyway. And, as you say, I would know. You see—"

Abruptly he stopped.

"What were you going to say?" asked Mr. Benson.

"—I hadn't meant to say anything," replied the manager. "I mean, I didn't realize what I was about to say. It doesn't mean anything."

"I'll decide that after I hear it," said his employer. "What is it?"

"Well," answered Todd, "all I know is that some of the other men in the office are always kidding Carman about your daughter. I mean that he's in love with her. And I know he sees her now and then."

"Well, I'll be ——," said Mr. Benson. "I hadn't thought of that. To close for me to see it. I suppose. But now I do recall that young Carman has called on Helen a few times and has taken her to a show or two.

"All right," he added after a moment, "that will be all. Forget it. Just forget it."

When Todd had gone Mr. Benson again became lost in thought. Here was a new problem. He felt that he had the answer to Bob Carman's reluctance to leave New York for he was the first young man who had considered a promotion well if it just so he could be near the girl he loved.

"H'mm," said Mr. Benson.

When he went home that evening he said nothing to Helen about Bob Carman. He added to her long and serious list Carman's name would not be added.

Finally he said, "Yes? I think you ought to do it. Is Bob asking for a long time? And you will, won't you? To see me?"

"I don't want to, but I—" answered Helen.

Bob Sees Benson
Takes Chicago Position

Three days passed and then on the morning of the fourth Bob Carman knocked on the door of Mr. Benson's office and entered.

Well, what is it, Bob?" said Mr. Benson.

He had, however, a good idea of what Bob wanted to see him about and he had been expecting the other to come to him. Office a thing which happened seldom did unless first sent for or the matter was of such importance that it had to be handled by the head of the firm.

"I've been thinking about that Chicago matter, Mr. Benson," he said.

"Yes?" answered his employer.

"I've decided to take it," said Bob. "It's too good an opportunity to miss. I'm ready to start whenever you want me to."

"Fine," said Mr. Benson. "I can get the three o'clock train tomorrow afternoon," answered Bob.

"All right," replied Mr. Benson. "See Todd and make whatever arrangements are necessary. He'll wire the Chicago office that you're coming. And stop by and see me again before you go."

When the door closed behind Bob, his employer smiled slightly. Well, he thought, it had worked, even to the train.

For his daughter was leaving on the same train to visit her aunt in Chicago for several weeks—as he had asked her to.

DOWD DEMANDS WILL BE SENT TO GOVERNOR

Checkup of State Institutions Is Planned to List Non-Citizen Employes

City Councillor Dowd's demand of Governor Ely that all alien nurses in state institutions be discharged and replaced by citizen nurses will receive consideration, the governor's secretary announced today.

Governor Ely, who is on his way to the Pacific coast, [illegible] Dr. Walter E. De Wolfe, [illegible] secretary, said and the [illegible] Department of Mental Diseases, along with a report on those handled at other points and treated in Massachusetts, are forced to ask in vain for work placed before him.

"Governor Ely's policy has always been one for employment of Massachusetts men and women," De Wolfe explained.

CITES THE STATUTE

Dowd declared it to be a criminal offense, under state law, to appoint or employ any person in violation of the General Laws. The statutes provide, he said, that preference be given to Commonwealth born for employment on all work for the state, cities or towns. The law offers no alternative, he declared.

A checkup of all state institutions is being made it is understood to determine how many alien nurses are in public pay.

With the discharge of 18 alien nurses from City Hospital following legal opinion of Corporation Counsel Samuel Silverman of Boston that under State law only citizen nurses may be employed in public institutions, State institutional heads announced no changes are to be made in their nursing personnel.

"WON'T DISCHARGE THEM"

Alien nurses in State institutions who have given good service are to be retained, according Dr. George H. Bigelow, State Commissioner of Public Health, and Dr. George M. Kline, State Commissioner of Mental Diseases.

These hospital heads will not follow the Boston precedent, they say, unless Attorney-General Joseph E. Warner, so instructs them. It is understood Mr. Warner will not offer any interpretation of the law unless requested by Dr. Bigelow. The latter, it is said, will not make the request.

MOVEMENT SPREADS

The Boston movement, it is learned, has spread to other communities.

At Quincy, Mayor Thomas J. McGrath has announced a drive against all aliens in every public department of the city.

Dr. Charles Cahill, chairman of the board of trustees of Cambridge City Hospital, last night said no more local [illegible] nurses are employed there. The matter of replacing them with citizen nurses, he said, would be taken up by the board at its meeting a week from today.

At Haverhill six nurses in Gale Hospital one at the Contagious Hospital, all aliens are confronted with discharge it is said.

'KID' IN VANISHING ACT KNOWS NEWS

First Stop Phone Booth to Call American After Flight From Hospital

"Hello, want a news tip?"

The news tip editor sprang to [illegible] as he agreed that was the reason for his being on the end of a telephone.

"Well, a kid just escaped from St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Brighton."

"How did he get away?"

"He sneaked his clothes out of a locker and then walked out in the middle of the visitors that were leaving."

"What's his name?"

"Henry Nickerson, Jr., and he lives at 378 Middle st., Braintree."

"All right, we'll look it right up. What's your name?"

ROBE OVER CLOTHES

And so a waiting world is informed of a thrilling escape from a hospital.

Henry was admitted as an appendicitis patient Aug. 3 and was operated on two days later.

For a week after he cared not about the wide open spaces, but recovery brought a longing to once again romp the byways of Braintree.

"My mother has no telephone and I suppose there was no way of telling her to come and get me," Henry said.

"So I got my clothes out of the locker, dressed up and put my bathrobe on over them.

"I waited for the time when the visitors would be leaving in the afternoon and then I slipped the bathrobe off and walked out with them.

NURSE A "PEACH"

"Gee, it was a good hospital but I wanted to be outdoors."

"But what about the nurses when they miss you. Don't you think they'll worry?" he was asked.

"I suppose they will, but I would worry more if I was still in there. Doris Cronin was a peach of a nurse though and I hate to cause her any worry."

Even at greater length Henry described his exploits and then boarded a train at South Station for home.

Nurses did miss their patient, but were relieved when the Boston Evening American informed them Henry was safe and en route home. They had searched the entire third floor for him.

"I'd rather be a cartoonist like the guy that draws Otto Grow," was his quick reply.

Henry is the oldest of eight children and longed for a sight of his six brothers and one sister, he said.

A Willing Slave ★ ★ ★

that the Modern "Princess" may be at her ease

IN the glamorous days of the Araby of old, women lived in perfumed luxury. Their courtyards were rose-draped and fountains sang, and the golden hours knew never a thought of arduous toil. Slaves there were to do every bidding. To be beautiful and to remain beautiful was almost a law.

Today . . . some women know almost equal release from human bondage . . . they are free to come and go, free to dance and play and read and relax, free to really live.

The obligation of housekeeping is admittedly arduous. It can very easily make a slave of a woman.

But Gas has come, with new benefits discovered continually—to give women back leisure and ease. It cooks food for her and cooks it better, more easily—it brings her the most efficient of refrigeration systems—it provides hot water for scores of uses—it solves problems and lightens burdens—at such a frugal cost.

HOW TO CURE MAN'S LOVE—RETURN IT WITH INTEREST

By HELEN ROWLAND

ALIMONY IS all right. You never lie awake nights wondering where it IS—but then you never can put your head on its shoulder and have a good cry.

It is always an act of charity for a sophisticated woman to teach a young man the art of love-making—charity to the next woman on whom he will practice it.

* * *

HELEN ROWLAND.

When a man asks you to marry him, these days, the safest and most diplomatic answer is "Yes—and no!" Because, you can't tell, after his third cocktail, which he is really longing to hear.

Perhaps the reason why a girl who takes the primrose path has so much attention is because most of the men are going that way, these days.

When a woman feels restless and adventurous, she has a facial, puts on her most becoming clothes and prays for something to happen; when a man feels that way, he has a drink, glances over his telephone-list, and starts right out to MAKE something happen. And yet women think they can WIN a man's love!

Love is not blind: it is merely astigmatic. It makes a woman see twice as much in a man as there really IS.

Lots of women honestly believe they have earned their fur coats and diamond bracelets when they have exhausted themselves wringing them out of a tired, overworked husband.

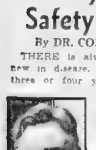
Be Sure Milk Is Strictly Pure; Safety First

By DR. COPELAND.

THERE is always something new in disease. For the past three or four years those interested in public health have been studying the problem of "undulant fever."



Dr. Copeland

Undulant fever is an infectious disease due to a germ called the Bacillus abortus," or "Brucella abortus." It attacks cattle, sheep, goats and pigs, and may be transmitted to human beings who care for these animals, or who engage in slaughtering them. Persons who are particularly susceptible may develop the disease by drinking the milk of the infected animals.

It is said that 20 per cent of our cattle are affected with this particular infection. This percentage is sufficiently high to demand great caution. It is important to see that proper tests are made of cows in every herd from which comes the public milk supply.

Efficient pasteurization destroys the undulant fever germ and other obnoxious germs. It is not sufficient to depend wholly upon pasteurization. Milk should be made safe before and after pasteurization, by keeping it absolutely clean and in a temperature not above 50 degrees F. Good milk, the best milk you can obtain, is pre-eminently the best food. If you value health, nothing but the best will do.

Apparently undulant fever does not attack children. But it is not wise to take the slightest risk when it comes to food. For babies and children, at any rate, must be given milk which is above suspicion.

Be careful to obtain your milk from sources which you know to be reliable. Be sure it comes from dairies which are carefully inspected. Get the milk which you are sure has taken the least possible time to travel from the farm to your door. Get the very best grade of milk for drinking purposes.

The Beauty Box

SMALL squares of gauze or cotton, kept in a closed glass jar, are convenient for applying witch hazel after the cold facial tubbing in the morning. This practice of witch hazeling the complexion puts a crimp in the ambitions of sebaceous glands whose object seems to be to make the feminine face look as if it were perennially buttered.

Fanchon Is Welcomed by 'Aunt'

rls and reluctantly but with a like courtesy that it was not Evelyn Howard at all but the Mystery Woman, the Gangster's Girl, who had occupied the press for some days past what would they have said? How looked? What done?

For the press had been as unhappy as the police at not finding Tony's "broad." They had not even learned her name. For Tony, although Fanchon had not read it at the time, had been rather careful where he was seen with her. He had not been seen with her at all . . . until that one last fatal night. And, when Fanchon had been Rose, who had once appeared . . . But Rose had not known Fanchon's name, either. Yes, the press would have been very happy to have found her, as happy, almost, as the police, for the press would have made a front-page human interest story out of it and would have echoed from coast to coast.

Now she was walking up the stairs. Now she was approaching the barriers. She bit back the desire for reckless, hysterical laughter. Tears were in her eyes. Tears of fatigue; tears of terror; of shaking nervousness.

A woman stepped forward from the crowd at the barrier and took her into her arms.

Evelyn—my dear!" said the woman.

Her voice was very deep—very low. She was, Fanchon realized instantly, in a moment of stunned amazement, the most beautiful woman she had ever seen. So carried more than sixty years like a banner. She was tall and slender. She had great blue eyes and a clear pallor and a sweet curved mouth. Under her small hat her hair was silver white. She had lovely hands. And there were tears on her cheeks to match Fanchon's own tears.

For a brief moment Mrs. Carstairs held Fanchon away at arms length. Then she exclaimed, puzzled, incredulous:

"But you're not Evelyn Howard . . . you're not really Evelyn Howard You can't be!"

Fanchon's heart turned over in her breast. The flush of excitement faded and her golden skin was gray with shock. To have traveled so far, upon her difficult road of deception, to have braced herself, to have dared so much and then with, the first word of greeting to face defeat!

"You're not really Evelyn Howard . . . you can't be . . ." this tall beautiful woman had said.

Thus, with the first speech between them, Fanchon encountered, as the fearful, bewildered, frightened and ashamed, shame, disgrace—perhaps worse. A mental vision of courts, newspaper headlines, perhaps even bars wavered on the shuddering screen of her mind. She swayed back from Mrs. Carstairs' stammering something . . . a vain, a mad protest.

Jennie Carstairs' arm went around her again, holding her in a close and comforting clasp. She said, quiet, contrite:

"Dear, I'm so sorry! I didn't mean to startle, to upset you. And after all you've been through! What an old idiot I am. Come, we'll go to the car. Let the porter take your little bag . . . Your trunk won't come for several days, but we'll attend to all that."

Talking, she half led Fanchon out through the station and the crowds to the big parked car. The chauffeur jumped down from his seat, touched his cap, took the pitiful little borrowed suitcase and opened the door. Mechanically, Fanchon climbed in.

It was early evening. Fifth ave. was at its best and loveliest under the slanting golden light. The car moved ahead smoothly, powerfully. A luxurious car, beautifully fitted.

Mrs. Carstairs still kept Fanchon's hand in hers. Fanchon, understanding nothing, still not comprehending the older woman's curious greeting, felt the blood come back to her cheeks and her cold hands, in a great wave of relief.

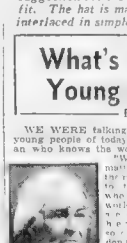
What's Wrong With Our Young People---and Why?

By WINIFRED BLACK



Winifred Black

WE WERE talking about the young people of today, the woman who knows the world and I.

"What is the matter with them?" said I to the woman who knows the world and loves it and who has had many years' experience with young people. "They don't seem a snap for anything or anybody but themselves and their own pleasure and their own selves. Don't they enjoy anything?"

"And the poor girls . . . I haven't seen a girl with a sweetheart who was really in love with her and was proud of it, and wanted everyone to know about it—no, not in the last 10 years.

"The men seem to despise the women, and the girls do all the downright, poor things.

"What on earth has happened to the girl?"

The woman who knows the world gave me a long look.

"Were you in France during the war," she said . . . Yes?

"Well, I was. I was head nurse at a big American hospital, and they had some fine nurses and some splendid doctors, but we also had a lot of empty-headed nannies, that got into war work by some pull or other, and the things those nannies did were enough to curdle your blood.

I've seen one of them step out into a garden to flirt with some young officer, and leave her patient with a gaping wound, and the bandage not even half on.

"Sacrifice, devotion, deep-hearted loyalty to an ideal—what did these nannies care for things like that. They came to the trenches to get a thrill, and the boys thought they were angels at first.

"They were almost ready to pray to them in their suffering and despair. But they soon learned and they grew to hate the very hustle of a nannie's dress when she came down the ward.

"It wasn't the wounds and the suffering, it wasn't the standing in the trenches in the filthy mud, that broke the hearts of the men at the front,

"It was the nannies—they did it all. They broke down the faith of the men, and those men came home and killed the world with seeping bitterness against women.

And I think it will take another generation to live this thing down.

"The decent girls and the fine women are paying today for what the nannies did in the day of the Great Horror.

Think it over, and see if you don't believe it.

I did think it over and I don't know whether I exactly believe it or not.

GRAND HOTEL

By VICKI BAUM

THE SWINDLE—so Preysing had forcibly described it to himself, and the word, very surprisingly, inspired him with a new kind of pride. The swindle he had perpetrated during the negotiations could be maintained at least for three days. During these days something would have to happen if ruin was not to overwhelm him.

The professional poisoning could be canceled within 14 days. He had just reached the first when a page boy, crowded his way out for Herr Preysing. He drank one more good mouthful of wine and marched off to booth No. 4. He put on that iron mask of the employer so notorious at Fredersdorf.

"I want Herr Brosemann," said the general director with the unemphatic tone of command due to his position. "Anything new, Brosemann, beyond your most unnecessary telegram of yesterday? No—not on the phone; we'll talk of that later. For the moment, that business is to be regarded as not having happened, do you understand? I want to speak to the old gentleman now, Brosemann, do you hear? Asleep? I'm afraid he will have to be wakened. No, all further instructions by letter. I'm waiting, then—"

Preysing waited. He cleared his throat and his heart beat with a distinct triumphant impatience. Then he heard the old man at Fredersdorf say:

"Hello, Good afternoon, Papa. Forgive me, please, for disturbing you. The conference is only just over. Thought it would interest you to hear the result at once. The provisional agreement is signed. No, signed, signed." (He had to shout for the old man had a pig-headed way of making himself out deafer than he was.) "Hard work, you say? Well, we pulled it off. Thanks, thanks, no ovations, please. But listen, Papa. I must go to Manchester at once. Yes, it is imperative—absolutely, absolutely imperative. Right. Right. I'll tell you in detail by letter. What's that? You are glad? So am I. (Yes, Fraulein, I've finished.) An revoir."

Preysing remained standing in the booth. What's this? he thought in astonishment. What's this about going to Manchester? What put that into my head? But it's a fine stroke—I must go to Manchester. I've fixed the matter here, and I'll fix it there too. Quite simple, he thought, and a new self confidence entered into him and blew him up like a balloon. This one little successful excursion into deceit had changed a solid, conscientious business man into an intoxicated gambler and speculator, whose very built foundations threatened every moment to collapse.

"I ought to ring up Mulle," he said to himself, but he did nothing of the sort. He felt a strange disinclination to talk to Mulle. It was a little too warm there in the dining room at home. Mulle liked overheated rooms. He did not ring her back. He went back to the dining room.

Preysing ate, drank his bottle of wine, lighted a cigar, and then went with hot head and cold feet up to his room. He felt surprised at himself in a pleasant and nebulous way, but he was, at the same time, quite done up by the morning's transactions. The fatigue and discomfort he felt became concentrated in an itching of his face and when he scratched it he felt his un-shaven cheeks. Avoiding the hotel barber, with whom he was still annoyed after the experience of the morning, he went to look for a reliable hairdresser in the neighboring streets.

And now a strange thing happened to General Director Preysing, a man of principles but without a razor, a man of sound views, who, none the less, had done something questionable, an unlucky man whose head has turned by success for the first time—it may seem a coincidence, and yet, for all that it may have been the irrevocable necessities of fate. This, in any case, is what happened.

The small barber's shop that Preysing entered was clean and inviting. Preysing was ushered into a chair and enveloped in sheet and bib. A moment's patience was politely requested. The senior assistant had just gone out to lunch—and then a bundle of illustrated papers was put into his hands to appease him. Preysing turned over the pages, with indifference at first, and almost with distaste, for he thoroughly disliked this frivolous manner of passing the time. But after a while he smiled at the same over this joke and this. Then he opened a page which remained open during the whole time that he sat in the barber's chair. Yes, he became so deeply absorbed in the contemplation of this photograph in a magazine that it quite upset him when the senior assistant returned and made ready to shave him.

Nevertheless, the photograph which so captivated him was nothing out of the common. It were to be found by the hundred in periodicals that were not in Preysing's line. The picture was of a naked girl standing on her toes and endeavoring to look over a screen that was too high for her to see over. Her arms were raised and she stood straining upwards in eager curiosity. This exceptionally well-favored and charming girl also had a face and here lay the extreme provocation of this particular picture—this face was known to the general director.

Obey Mother, Is the Advice of Miss Fairfax

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

We are two pals of 17 years of age who would like to have our problem settled. We are allowed to go to a dance once a week, but our mothers object to our coming home with fellows with whom we are well acquainted. Do you think that is fair? Don't you think we are old enough to come home with them?

Also, how late do you think we should be allowed to stay out at night, week nights I mean? Do you think our mothers should object to our having a date once or even twice a week? We shall be anxiously awaiting your verdict.

TWO PALS.

Dear Two Pals: At 17 years of age, your best counsellor is your mother, and I hope for a year or two, at least, you will abide by her judgment. I think midnight is as late as any girl of 17 should stay out.

YOU CAN DEPEND UPON ME! I HAVE TO KNOW MY GROCERIES!.. AND I KNOW THAT WONDER-CUT IS THE BEST BREAD BAKED. IT TASTES RIGHT BECAUSE IT'S BAKED RIGHT...SLO-BAKED THROUGH AND THROUGH. I EVEN SELL MYSELF TWO LOAVES A DAY. THE WIFE WOULDN'T HEAR OF ANY OTHER BREAD NOW.

FANNING

By GEORGE UNDERWOOD

Mit "Howdy," Folkn. Corsair Sparkplug.
He Is Some Player. Starred at Amherst.
Made the Pirates. See Him at Wigwam.

GROSKLOSS AN 'ERA' IN PITTSBURGH

At Amherst he played football and sure could lote the ball
And then he joined the Pirates, became a Son of Maul.
You'll see him at the Wigwam and we are telling you
That Groskloss is the spark plug of clouting Corsair crew!

When the Pirates threw out skirmishing lines at the Wigwam, yesterday, 'Howdy" Groskloss's smiling face sadly was missed at second. 'Howdy" was well known to New England fans, for before he ent to Yale Medical School - he returns next month as sophomore — he played football for dear old Amherst. And "Howdy" sure played "some" football. He was one of the best backs New England ever boasted and don't forget the flock of stars who have toted pigskins on Bay State gridirons. Some of the boys even rated Groskloss as great as Eddie Casey.

But it isn't football which has Groskloss in the limelight, now It's baseball. For "Howdy" Groskloss has developed into the spark plug of the Pittsburgh Pirates, the cog that "made" the Pittsburgh machine and which has brought it roaring out of the Slough of Despond steaming full speed ahead up in National League ranking. The Pirates come pretty near being the sensation of the present season. It is "Howdy" Groskloss which has made them such. And now Howdy is out of the game with an injured knee. Us baseball managers do have our troubles

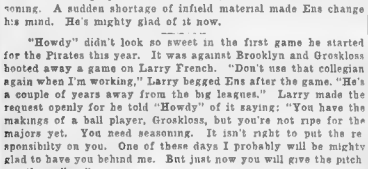
The Pirates changed almost overnight with Groskloss. The apparently hopeless, helpless aggregation has won something like 23 of 34 games played since Groskloss mounted the keystone hassock. One Pittsburgh sports scribe recently wrote:

"In viewing the activities of the Pirates this year one should be careful to divide them into two eras: B. G. and A. G., meaning, of course, Before Groskloss and After Groskloss."

Manager Jewel Ens doesn't hesitate in giving the former Amherst star due credit for the rise of the Corsairs. "He was the one cog I needed to get the infield working," says Jewell. "He has cut the opposition's total down with double plays of his own engineering and on the attack has been hitting timely and effectively. Groskloss was the spark plug we so badly needed."

If Fate hadn't stepped in just at the proper time this year Groskloss would have been sent to Wichita and both he and the Pirates would have been out of luck. "Howdy" said "Howdy" to the Pirates late last season and made the last swing around the circuit with the Corsairs, but on the bench. Reporting this year after the college season in June Groskloss failed to set the woods afaire and Ens prepared to send him to the bushes for more seasoning. A sudden shortage of infield material made Ens change his mind. He's mighty glad of it now.

"Howdy" didn't look so sweet in the first game he started for the Pirates this year. It was against Brooklyn and Groskloss booted away a game on Larry French. "Don't use that collegian again when I'm working," Larry begged Ens after the game. "He's a couple of years away from the big leagues." Larry made the request openly for he told "Howdy" of it saying: "You have the makings of a ball player, Groskloss, but you're not ripe for the majors yet. You need seasoning. It isn't right to put the responsibility on you. One of these days I probably will be mighty glad to have you behind me. But just now you will give the pitchers the willies."



When the Pirates hit Boston a fortnight later Larry French had changed his mind. "Howdy" had played a corking game through a Philadelphia series and here in Boston his stellar playing was largely responsible for the Pirates taking three out of four from the Braves. It was here in Boston on their last invasion that the Pirates launched the big offensive that made them the talk of baseball.

It chiefly was because he is a Pittsburgh product that "Howdy" signed with the Pirates, instead of hooking up with the Athletics. During his junior year at Amherst Ira Thomas, scouting for Connie Mack, saw "Howdy" work in the game against Williams and was so impressed he wanted to take Groskloss to Philadelphia that night and get his signature to a contract. But "Howdy" was bound by an old promise to give Dreyfuss first call on his services.

When Groskloss was at Kiski School, where he prepared for Amherst, he had an offer from the Pirates and in 1927 on his summer vacation worked out with the Corsairs. Dreyfuss wanted to sign him then but "Howdy" decided he would not play professional baseball until he had graduated. Besides the Athletics, Cleveland made him an offer. He had other offers, too, but turned them all down. After graduating from Amherst Groskloss returned to Pittsburgh and told Dreyfuss he was ready to talk turkey. The Pirates' owner outbid Philadelphia and Cleveland. Barney Dreyfuss is dead now. But his baseball judgment certainly was vindicated by Groskloss.

Old Barney is a saying, "Now didn't I tell you so."
I saw that kid at Kiski, took to him from the start,
The way he kept his promise, sure tickled my old heart.
He's sure a star ball player, but why I am so fond
Of Howdy Groskloss is that he made his word his bond!"

Grove 'Great, but Old Heroes' Marks Better

By JOE CASHMAN

Robert Moses Grove recently turned in his 16th straight and 25th victory of the season. He seems certain to win more than 30 games before the race is over.

George Earnshaw and Rube Walberg, his mound mates on the champion Athletics, [illegible] fair to pick [illegible] or more triumphs this season.

Other hopes such as Ed Brandt of the Braves, Paul Derringer of the Cards, Dolf Luque of the Reds, Guy Bush of the Cubs, Danny MacFayden of the Red Sox and Wes Ferrell of the Indians may reach the 20-victory mark.

The introduction of the slower ball has again made the pitcher, who was nothing but the lamb to be [illegible] during the past few years, the big noise in baseball.

And the fans, ever inclined to ignore the past, jump at conclusions and speak in superlatives, are all hot and bothered over the remarkable showing of the flingers.

Given in the [illegible] pitcher ever, many of them, while others insist that never before were there so many great pitchers in the big show at the same time.

Grove is a great pitcher, the best by far in the game today, but he has had his greatest year remember that [illegible] of those who were played when [illegible] was a boy were pretty fair pitchers, many flingers also.

We [illegible] one of the [illegible] years ago [illegible]

Young, Johnson and Others Truly Great

We were thinking [illegible] and Cy Young, who won [illegible] games or scores more than [illegible] all probably Walter Johnson, who won 411 games, [illegible] ing 132 shutouts, fanned 3,4[illegible] rs and gave [illegible] runs in 5,9[illegible] innings, and of old [illegible] e Radbourne, who once won [illegible] games in a season, when there [illegible] press-box at the Wigwam [illegible] a crew based a gnat as tan as a dogwatch, stopped to explain proceedings to a "[illegible] attendants and purchase in Al Spohrer button.

It was Jack Chesbro, too rarely hear his name mentioned when star pitchers are being discussed, yet he was the first of the great spitballers, one of the best hurlers in the game for more than ten years and is the owner of the most victories in a season in modern baseball.

He turned in the mark in 1904, when he won 41 games for the Yankees. Grove has never come close to approaching that record and it's a safe bet that he never will.

Chesbro had his 42d game and an American League championship as well as won that season only to lose it to the Red Sox at the end of Huntington ave. grounds.

The Boston club, managed by Jimmy Collins, had won the championship and beaten the Pirates in the post-season series the year before and were heavy favorites to repeat in 1904, but Chesbro's pitching kept the Yanks in the race until the day before the close of the season.

Wild Pitch Gave Boston Championship

The contenders had two games to play and if the Yanks could win both, they would go into a tie for the lead. Chesbro was entrusted with the task of winning the opener and had the verdict as good as salted away in the ninth when he let loose a wild pitch which landed in the grandstand and, incidentally was recovered by the late George Touhy, noted wrestling promoter, a run crossed the plate and [illegible] tied the score and [illegible] champion.

Chesbro broke in with the Pirates and pitched [illegible] National League championships in 1901 and 1902 and then jumped to New York, where he remained until 1910, when he voluntarily retired to go into the lumber business in Conway, Mass., his home town.

He is still in that business but occasionally when the Yanks or Pirates come to town he drops in to compare the present day hurlers with those of his time.

He refuses to be drawn into any arguments relative to the ability of pitchers then and now but until Mother Nature comes along to [illegible] more than forty games in a campaign, Jack can laugh at those who say that Grove is a greater pitcher than was he or Young, Wadell, Johnson, Plank, Mathewson and the other aces of his day.

He saw some pretty good pitching from Ed Brandt and Ray Kremer in the opening game yesterday, the former allowing only four hits in ten innings and winning his 16th victory of the season, 2 to 1, while his mates were collecting five bingles.

NATIONAL AMATEUR AUG. 31

New York, Aug. 21 (AP) In the absence of Bobby Jones and George Von Elm, the United States Golf Association has nominated Harrison R. (Jimmy) Johnston of St. Paul at the top of the "seeding list" for the national amateur golf championship starting August 31 at the Beverly Country Club.

The first ten officers were as follow.

Harrison R. Johnston, St. Paul.
Eugene Homans, Englewood, N.J.
T. Philip Perkins, New York.
Johnny Goodman, Omaha, Neb.
Charles Seaver, Los Angeles.
Francis Ouimet, Boston.
Maurice J. McCarth, New York.
George J. Voight, New York.
Dr. Oscar Willing, Portland, Me.
George T. Dunlap, Jr., New York.

Of these, only eight will be seeded for the first round of qualifying play and if withdrawals or qualifying round failures cut any of these into the "first ten" that leaves more than eight players in the match play begins, the vacancies will be made up by lot from a "second ten" named by the U. S. G. A. as now including:

Fay Coleman, Culver City, Cal.; John De Forest, England; Frank Dolp, Portland, Ore.; Charles Evans, Jr., Chicago; Jesse P. Guilford, Boston; John E. Lehman, Chicago; William Lawson Little, Jr., San Francisco; Max R. Marston, Philadelphia, Philadelphia; Roland Mackenzie, Wilmington, Del., and C. Ross Somerville of London, Ont., Canadian amateur champion.

Johnston's place at the top apparently was due in the fact that he is the latest of the ex-champions in the field. He won in 1928 defeating Dr. Willing in the final round.

LETOURNIER SEEKS 1ST WIN

At the Revere cycle track this year, All Letourneau-Pierchan has yet to finish in first place. Tomorrow, however, Letournier has a good chance of winning the American motor paced crown and with Francesco Georgetti out of the race, Al will ride his stock legs off to make every possible point he can while the Italian is lying low.

Tomorrow it is an hour championship race the Mayor Casass Sweepstakes. Letourneau, Jimmy Walthour, Gerard DeBates, Frank Duelberg, Freddy Spencer and Charley Jaeger are to start.

The first tandem race of the year is offered as the side attraction with three teams starting. It will be three one mile heats with the winners to be decided on points. Other races are listed for both amateurs and pros.

Schooners Race for Astor Cup

Newport, R. I., Aug. 21 (AP)—The Astor cups for schooners and sloops were at stake today off Brenton's Reef lightship.

Most of the sailing craft which have competed for various trophies during the annual New York Yacht Club cruise were entered in today's contests. During the cruise the fleet visited Vineyard Haven, Provincetown, Marblehead and Wianno Neck in Massachusetts, sailing each leg of the course as a race.

Tomorrow the cruise will come to a close with the annual race for the King's Cup, and the fleet will disband.

Reds Are Tamed

GOOD GOLF

By CHESTER HORTON
"Golf's Greatest Teacher"

If the ball is to keep straight the clubface must go through squarely. It is at direct angles to the direction line in the address. It must be in that position at the moment it strikes the ball. It must stay in that position a moment or two after it takes the ball or during what is called the follow-through. If this "square" position of the blade to the ball is altered, some degree of inaccuracy will be reflected in the flight. This means that in the forward swing you give your club a sort of throw into the ball, not urgently applied—not violent or pressed—a throw as if you were to throw your club away from you, slightly toward the right of you. And your hands meantime, swing through without rolling.

DAILY SHOTS FROM EVERYWHERE

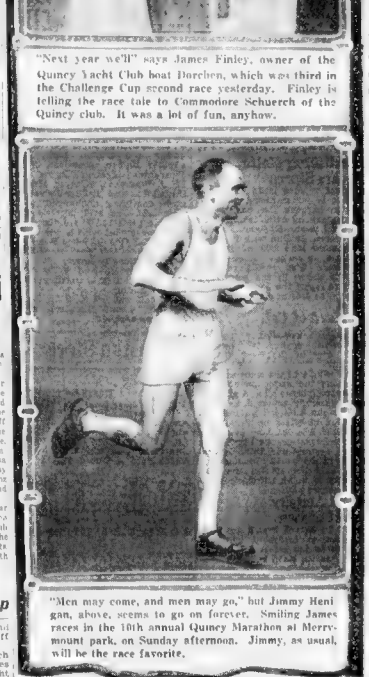
"Next year we'll" says James Finley, owner of the Quincy Yacht Club boat Dorchen, which was third in the Challenge Cup second race yesterday. Finley is telling the race tale to Commodore Schuerch of the Quincy club. It was a lot of fun, anyhow.



"Men may come, and men may go," but Jimmy Henigan, above, seems to go on forever. Smiling James races in the 10th annual Quincy Marathon at Merrymount park, on Sunday afternoon. Jimmy, as usual, will be the race favorite.

THE DAILY DOZEN

—By MYLES T. McSWEENEY—

"Jack Dempsey knocked out Jack Beasley in two rounds." That item is not from the papers of five years ago. It happened Wednesday night, Aug. 19, 1931. It appears that even after his divorce, Dempsey plans to keep right on fighting.

Dempsey and Beasley fought in Reno, Nevada. A sound travels at only 1100 feet a second, we haven't heard a splash yet, if there was one. Ringside critics say it didn't look like a dive but we are going to look up the low-hard records just the same.

The governors of Texas and Oklahoma have stopped the flow of oil by calling out the National Guard. It would take the Army, Navy and Marine Corps to stop the oil gushed forth by managers of heavyweights.

So many second John L. Sullivans are being continually discovered. They fight just like John L. Yeah! Like H.

A former football star is held, charged with impersonating a dry agent and collecting $2000 "protection" money. You can't take a pass on those dry agents. They've been playing together too long.

And they never fumble a ball, either.

Thirty-seven nations have already put in orders for tickets for the 1932 Olympic games. The stadium at Los Angeles will seat only 105,000. That means that about 2,000,000 free ticket hounds will be disappointed.

Add depression notes. A noted educator says that many small colleges will have to close because of economic conditions. Football players and coaches will soon be selling "your winning colors" at the gate.

At the Greenwich Country Club, Greenwich, Conn., golfers are transported by auto to the 12th hole, which is at the top of a rather steep rise. It's hard to tell when a golfer means by a "drive" on that course.

History is repeating itself. The auto has displaced the horse. Rockingham Park, where running races were abruptly halted by the hand of the law early in the summer, will be the scene of auto racing on Labor Day.

If Notre Dame graduates continue to grab off college coaching jobs, it won't be long before there will be nothing but tie games in football. All the teams will be using the same strategy the same plays, and one team trying to outsmart another will be just like a person trying to fool himself.

M'LARNIN IS WINNER OVER PETROLLE

New York, Aug. 21 (AP)—The Irish clan of McLarnin can rest easy today so far as the threat of battle-scarred little Billy Petrolle, the one-time Fargo Express, is concerned.

Pinkie-and Jimmy McLarnin, pride and joy of the clan, settled the matter quite convincingly last night before a small and oddly mixed crowd at the Yankee Stadium. Jimmy whipped and battered Petrolle so decisively in 10 rounds that it became quite monotonous, save the formality of raising the welterweight Irishman's glove in the well-known Celt. Referee Joe Humphries

This was McLarnin's second straight triumph over Petrolle. It was by far the more decisive of the two and together they put the finishing touches to the McLarnin reputation by the slugging Jimmy absorbed one night at Madison Square Garden last winter.

Before receiving the unanimous decision of judges and referee, McLarnin did everything but put Billy on the floor.

McLarnin's Right Hand Lacks Punch

McLarnin hasn't the dynamite in his right hand any longer. He seems to favor it since sustaining an injury. At least a dozen times he landed it flush on Petrolle's chin without putting the tough Dakotan down.

Jimmy tried hard in the sixth, seventh and eighth rounds to land the old haymaker. Petrolle was bleeding and groggy, but withstood the best his rival threw at him. Bill sagged badly in the eighth but came back in the last two rounds with a courageous flurry.

Seldom has McLarnin given a better exhibition of all-around boxing. Through the first half of the fight he jabbed Petrolle dizzy with his left scoring at will, carried a sweeping attack to both eyes of Billy's right eye and cut his mouth.

By the sixth Petrolle was in bad shape, bleeding profusely but rallying gamely enough to make McLarnin weary. By the ninth Billy's right eye was tightly closed.

The Irishman was much too strong, fast and clever for Petrolle. Jimmy had a seven-pound pull in the weights, scaling 146 to Billy's 139 and used it to good advantage.

Petrolle's best rounds were the third and fifth. He held McLarnin even on points on these two, landing effectively to the head and body. McLarnin carried the remaining eight rounds by good-sized margins.

FARMERS RELISH RADIO

Many Distant Listening Posts

By N. E. T.

Nothing like a trip into the sticks for annoying new thoughts about radio. One afternoon and evening, 5000 miles from Boston-town broadens our mental perspective profoundly—that is, concerning radio.

Vegetables, eggs and milk are therefore not the only fresh commodities prevalent down on the farm. A great many bewhiskered rural sages take their stand and argue "city slicker" blue in the face to the effect that broadcasting is more or less responsible for at least a measure of America's agricultural ills.

RADIO A RAINMAKER

As convincing proof of such contention, Uncle Joshua points out the unusual amount of rainfall these past few summers. Rattling one's noodle against the proverbial stone wall is playful pastime compared with any attempt to successfully maintain an opposite viewpoint. Try it sometime!

* * *

Yet there seems to be no prejudice or ignorance, these hardbitten of the productive and know most of the major programs by heart. What few nots can sparsely settled areas are found, go silent very seldom.

* * *

These stalwart citizens who never saw fit to inhabit big cities, invariably find time to talk about radio in between their all important discussions of crops. Uncle Joshua has his oddly styled sense of humor, even while discoursing on hay, straw crops for instance. He'll facetiously remind one that Egypt is a good hay market. Without it, Arabs couldn't break a camel's back.

UNIVERSALITY USED

Furthermore these aged sons of weather beaten branches. Strands of the stuff are invaluable in government observatories as accurate indicators of which way the wind blows. By now it's obvious Uncle Joshua is jushing. Even so he insists certain magazines use a heap in connection with exploiting a nation-wide vote.

* * *

Just about then he should be interrupted. Tell him how lifeguards still lose lives and ingenuable airsick to departing summers.

Visiting verbally on the subject of radio furnishes welcome relaxation. Never in the general store without its community set. Listeners gather from miles around to fraternize while tuning in Amos 'n' Andy. As many as 40 conveyance gate to hear a popular cigarette program, arbitrarily puffing away on makeshift corn husk fags. Open defiance of sponsorship is evident nightly.

BOSTON STATIONS HEARD

Debating affairs of state with Uncle Joshua's aroma, Squire Sabins, creates an all powerful impression that Matt Thompkins and his Real Folks are holding a town meeting. To have an announcer break in any minute would hardly be surprising WBZ WNAC WEEI and WAAB come in nearly How they love the Globe Trotter. Every "Missus" likes Martha Lee.

Mosquitos assist in creating the phonetic illusions of static, quite as pronounced as the real and annoying crackling of a city receiver.

Most of the boys think Seth Parker is great, and even spin a fantastic yarn about his securing local color there among them . . . A swing plugger is unknown, unless one scrawny fiddler might be accused of excessive effort in attempting to popularize "Good Bye, Dolly Gray." . . . Another snappy tune seems to have unmistakably caught on. It's called "Pay Old Bill."

RUDY'S RIVAL.

Ambling toward a picturesque farm house, finding one's way to a spacious upstairs room brings the day to a close. Sleep won't come at once, however. No radio set is going, but Rudy Valles may well enjoy that replica of palm crooning from the limb of a towering oak nearby.

There's no escape from radio down on the farm. Still isn't a push one as afforded refuge from ice cubes, wine bricks, etc., etc.

Personalities

When his secretary says Rudy Valles "is in conference" it is probably a billiard game . . . And now Pat SCHULTZIANA, thanks to CBS, SPONSORGLE and RUDY . . . Identity of the Street Singer has been revealed. He is ARTHUR TRACY, formerly stage singer . . . ## On the Air

Reception of the Advertising Club of N. Y. to Russell Boardman and John Polando will be h'dcast on the CBS Monday at 11:15. WAAB will carry the program locally . . . Vice-President Curtis, the Speaker of Washington, at least whenever radio is concerned, speaks on the CBS Monday at 9:45 p. m.

For every groan there will be a cheer for this tidbit: Rudy Vallee has been signed by NBC for an additional three years of radio crooning . . . NBC's favorite Irish tenor, John Fogarty, sings over WBZ at 8 this eve . . . And speaking of Irish tenors, they say Allan Jones soon will be doing the NBC guest artist rounds . . . There is a growing possibility that the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts will be h'dcast this fall. Which would probably bring Arthur (WEEI) Fiedler and his prolific knowledge of music to the mike . . .

The Gossipers, nightly WAAB elec. transcription, will come to Boston Monday to appear before a WAAB mike "in the flesh." They leave N. Y. to remain at WAAB for an extended engagement . . . John Herrick is guest announcer on Will Dodge's Stockings concert next Thursday . . . John S. Young, formerly of WBZ, now guiding the announcing destinies of many choice CBC programs, will go in for drama with a WEAF offering Thursday. Merkin Abel's next play is titled Faith-Boston highspots Sept. 5 with Eli Dorsay . . . CBS will feature the Toledo Symphony Orchestra should tell the network that everyone appears like a ghost in some town or other when being televised . . .

The day after CBS devotes a h'cast to Boardman and Polando, the 13th, WAAB will h'cast the Welcome Home Party for the flyers. From 8 to 10 exercises on the Strandway, South Boston, will be on the air and several medical and national figures will speak . . . NBC must have lost faith in its amateur "picking pipers" who participate in the keys to Happiness p'gram. A professional, Alda Astori, will be heard tomorrow or next at 11:30 . . . The Japanese network which will re'cast the Lindberghs' welcome is known as JOAK. And from the way the postponements of the h'cast are coming in, the network's name is very appropriate.—M. G. M.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

1930 in Date 570,004,160
1929 in Date 699,702,200

New York, Aug. 21—A steady tone developed in Wall St. trading in the second period today after a fairly firm opening followed by development of a heavy tone.

By mid-day prices in a majority of cases were hovering around yesterday's close.

HOME PROFIT-TAKING

Some profit-taking was evident. Safeway Stores and J. I. Case, recent pool favorites slipped back a point. Similar setbacks showed for American Telephone, Eastman Kodak, Allied Chemical and du Pont.

U. S. Steel was up fractionally in most transactions. Oils and rails were rather soft and coppers steady and quiet.

Trading remained extremely listless, and price changes were largely narrow in inconsequential. Rails lacked important impetus in either direction and trade was hesitant.

Motor shares were under mild pressure, reflecting expectations that introduction of new models by Chrysler may result in partial shutdowns in the meantime. General Motors sagged fractionally. Hupp slipped back ⅛ in the early deals.

American Tobacco B was again soft, losing 2 points. Auburn rushed up about 2 points, then fell back 4 before rallying.

Radio shares were well bought in the forenoon dealings, the common, however, was little changed, while the preferred "B" stock rose more than a point.

CHRYSLER EASIER

Sterling calves were barely steady at the start, sagging 1-16 to $4.85 15-16.

Chrysler sold fractionally. Recent setbacks in Chrysler stock reflect primarily the constant pressure against General Motors, although market sentiment toward the entire automobile group has of late undergone a change toward the bearish side. It is recognized that the last half of 1931 is little likely to prove very profitable for the industry.

Chrysler undoubtedly has enjoyed the most vigorous market sponsorship of any motor issue. Many of the Street's largest bull interests have been at one time or another in recent months prominently identified with the bull side of the stock. As a matter of fact, in extremely recent times a practical operator of rather bearish leanings also acquired a block of Chrysler below present prices.

His explanation is typical of the entire Street's attitude toward Chrysler:

"I know that prospects depend mainly on the Plymouth car and that the company will not make money until it sells its cars in large quantities. It is, however, the most interesting of the auto shares because of the management's aggressiveness in a year of poor business. No one else is making the stock as an investment and I have hesitated to recommend its purchase by my friends."

All of which, boiled down, is a compliment to Walter Chrysler's ability to win Wall Street to his side. The stock is a speculation on the success or failure of the new model.

Society of Coal Technology announces from Germany that experiments now being conducted ultimately may result in coal being used for food.

In other words, we'll eat our coal and burn our wheat for fuel.

THIS MEANS YOU

(Lamar, Mo., Democrat)

"We have lately heard that a number of young men met on the bridge east of town and engaged in a game of cards. This should not be indulged in and is not permissible. We have not the names of the parties, but we are informed that a recurrence of the game will enlist the services of the prosecuting attorney."

Milestone on the Path to Civilization:

INDIANAPOLIS—C. W. Hardwick today was under sentence of 10 days in jail and a $50 fine for slapping a cigarette out of Mrs. Faleco's mouth when he saw her smoking in the street. The judge ordered Hardwick to "keep his nose out of other people's business in the future."

Port of Boston

By JAMES J. DELANEY

The ban on Russian shipwood here has been lifted, since the United States Treasury Department determined that Soviet convict labor was not employed in handling it. Boston will get its first Soviet cargo on the Norwegian steamer Fernhill, due at Mystic docks, Charlestown, Aug. 26. The entire cargo will be forwarded to the paper mills at Turners Falls.

Seven vessels carried groundfish. One "halibutter" arrived. The Georgina Silveira, with 41 of the big fish, was the only swordfish fighter coming in. Her skipper is awaiting today's market before selling thinking that a better price will prevail. Local dealers got 82 swordfish on the steamer Yarmouth.

Is This "Progress"?

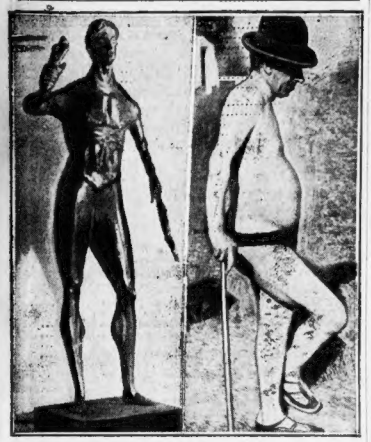
If So, Kindly Take Us Back to Greece and Rome



TWO THOUSAND YEARS AGO, AND TODAY

Pope's "Human form divine" depends a good deal on whose form it is.

Of course, we know nothing definite about Divinity, far above our weak powers of conception.

One thing is certain, the human form divine takes MANY FORMS on this planet, through the ages, and this picture emphasizes some DIFFERENCES interestingly.

On the left you see a statue of an athlete, presenting the ideal of an Etruscan sculptor who worked 200 years before Christ was born.

On the right you see a modern member of a "nudist colony" on the edge of the Seine River, in France.

This nudist colony is not quite as bad as some others, for the gentleman wears, at least, SOMETHING. But you will agree that the appearance and reputation of the human race for beauty would be improved if he wore an old-fashioned nightgown, reaching to the ground.

Contrasting the body of the ancient athlete, muscles standing out, no surplus fat, and the nudist gentleman from France, you will agree that "progress" by the human form divine in this case has gone RAPIDLY BACKWARD.

The gentleman with the derby hat, on the right, may say:

"What I have IN MY HEAD more than makes up for the superior figure of that old Etruscan, and my intelligence should make you forget the size of my paunch."

---

But he is wrong. Intelligence should control itself and its body. It should not allow itself to become a cross between a pumpkin and an angleworm.

It is all a matter of WILL power, and all gentlemen with paunches as big as this one, or bigger, should begin now to reduce.

Moderate and wise DIET, moderate and wise EXERCISE. Nothing more is required.

Needless to say, in ancient days there were also some badly shaped individuals. Some Roman emperors had paunches, doubtless, four times the size of this one—for instance, Vitellius, the emperor from whose gluttonous eating we derive the word "victuals."

Nevertheless, except in cases that doctors attribute to defective metabolism, which means lack of tissue-changing power, there is no excuse for being fat, among MEN.

There is often a good excuse for women that are fat.

For what they do, producing the human race, is bad for their shape. You should say to yourself when you see a fat woman, "She cannot help it, I sympathize with her, and she is beautiful in spite of it." TRAIN yourself to think so.

You may say to yourself when you see a fat MAN, "HE IS LAZY." He will know that you are telling the truth.

Bankers Can Help

Thirty-seven cities and towns, having half the population of New England, will soon establish local employment thermometers.

Like the Liberty Loan thermometers of wartimes, they will show whether employment goes up or down.

Bankers, handling factory payrolls, will supply the figures of employment, regarded as the most accurate.

The bankers have blown hot and cold the last two years, mostly cold.

Some warm winds in the form of careful loans to well-managed industry looking for a chance to expand would force the mercury of these thermometers up to blood-heat. That would indicate that every willing worker has a job and an income for his family.

'Hare-Brained Chatter'

A guest preacher in a Boston church said:

"You'll get more mileage in life if you never shift your mouth into high gear until you're sure your brain is turning over."

Disraeli described it more elegantly, just 53 years ago:

"The hare-brained chatter of irresponsible frivolity."

It will never stop; that is, unless busy tongues were paid to wag. Then they might go on strike for shorter hours.

Working Girl . . Wife

HERE IS a letter. Not an unusual letter in these days. Simply a working girl's remarks about her married sister. But historians would tell you that it is as significant as a war . . . that it is, indeed about a war, the war between the old woman's world and the new.

Elsie Robinson

That war is going on in every house on your street. Every woman you know is in it, on one side or the other. Reading this letter you, too, will take sides. Which side? I wonder.

Dear Miss Robinson:

I don't know whether subjects like this come into your column, but I feel I must talk it out to someone. It is about my sister!

First I must tell you something about us. My sister and I are orphans. She is twenty-six and I am twenty-four. I have lived with her since she married, six years ago.

My brother-in-law and I work in the same building. He works in the circulation department of a newspaper and I work in the classified ads. Al is thirty-two years of age. He is a nice fellow and we get along fine although I think he is kind of conceited. He works very hard and makes a good salary—about $75 per week. He and my sister Harriet have a lovely little home, a small car and two babies. She has a cleaner in once a week and sends out the washing.

Now here is the trouble. When Al and Harriet married they were crazy about each other. Everything went pretty good until after the first baby was born — then the trouble began. I might as well tell you right now that I think it is mostly my sister's fault, Miss Robinson. From the day the baby came she began slopping around. She wasn't sick and the baby was troublesome—but she just acted as if she had done so much for Al by having that baby that she didn't have to keep up appearances any more. Sometimes she is dressed up and has the house tidy and dinner ready when we come home, but nearly always she hasn't. She never uses the least bit of system.

Now this gets Al's goat terribly. He is a very systematic man. He has to be in his work and so do I. At first he was so crazy about her that he didn't say anything. He just pitched in and helped her do the work she had left undone. Sometimes he worked until after ten cleaning up, and let her go to bed. I would help too But after a while he got sick of it and so did I. Now when he comes home and finds things in that mess he says something sarcastic or put his hat on again and goes out and eats in a restaurant. Then my sister cries terribly.

She says she is sure that some other woman is taking Al away from her. Once she caught Al eating at our lunch counter beside one of the girls from his department. She watched and she saw him pay the check. I tried to tell her that all the fellows and girls do that but she wouldn't believe it. She says she will kill any woman who steals her husband.

Miss Robinson, I love my sister and I know Al has his faults but I think she is all wrong about this. It is her own fault. It all comes because she won't see that marriage is a business like any other job. If I loafed on my job and muddled it all up the way she does, I'd be fired in a week. She says she doesn't loaf but I have seen her spend a whole hour gossiping over the phone. And she'll lie down and read a novel with the dishes piled in the sink.

I guess it's a terrible thing to say, but I don't think it is very surprising if men fall for working girls when their wives act like that. A working girl has to keep neat and attractive, good-natured, peppy and up to the times. No matter how she feels she has to be a live wire. But a wife can act anyway she pleases and she thinks her husband ought to stay crazy about her. How do they get that way?

Alice Whiteley.

Well, there's the evidence. What's YOUR verdict?

In London

What London Drinks

LONDON, Aug. 21—It is noticeable almost everybody in England partaking of alcoholic beverages drinks whiskey neat. There seems little taste for mulled ale, barley wine and other enkindling brews for which the country has been poetized.

Even port has become a special after dinner formality instead of a custom. The England of leisurely tap rooms, stone mugged drinks, floating with cinnamon like driftwood, and long-stemmed clay pipes remains only on fading old prints. Genial wassail has given way to a speak-easy hurry.

In a hundred other ways London is swiftly shedding its antiquity. There is a freshness—a safety razor and quick lunch tempo in central streets that once bespoke so convincing of other days. Modernism breaks with sharp angles through ancient architectural crusts.

It will likely call down the wrath of Englishmen in America upon this venerable gray head to say architecturally London appears to be aping New York, but so it strikes me—more so this visit than any other. There is a distinct "Fifth avenue look" to Regent street.

Bow street might be a cross street in the Forties and skyscrapers. This morning my wife took me to see the Crimean monument at the end of Victoria street. On the site once stood Gatehouse Prison, where in 1660 Samuel Pepys was a prisoner on the charge of divulging secrets to the French about the navy.

It was in this same prison Sir Walter Raleigh spent his last agonizing night prior to his execution. In one of the cells Sir Richard Lovelace wrote: "Stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage." Later we visited an old pub which Pepys is reputed to have frequented.

I like the Englishman best in his home. Almost any place else he has an irritating starchiness, but by his own fireside he mellows. No other race produces such marvelous hosts. The moment one crosses a British threshold there is a studied effort to put a guest at ease and make him feel perfectly at home. The well-bred Englishman, too, unbends at home and one invariably finds he has an extraordinary store of knowledge about art, music, ceramics and other cultural achievements. He can even discuss lace without giving one a whoops impression.

* * *

Whitechapel is London's Bowery. I started there today, but remembering a past experience avoided it. On that occasion a drunk lurched toward me and in rich Cockney growled: "One side! I got no better sense than to biff you stiff!"

* * *

Those mutton faced clubmen with drooping mustaches who blow noses with a ripping snort and clear throats with a hearty garumph are not altogether creations of the comic paper. Peter Arno's Cadwalladers may be found peering at life from every club window. They are the retired colonels, generals and major generals brought back from colonial campaigns to a Scotch-and-soda valetudinarianism. They cannot accustom themselves to a life without military bluster. If they ask for a match in a restaurant it is with the ferocity of rebuking a lowly subaltern. I met one in a Claridge lounge. He arose with a gouty twinge, glared and sat down without a word. "A nasty tempered old buzzard," I remarked afterward to the introducer. "All side," he replied. "He blubbers at the cinema."

* * *

About 12 years ago—come next haying—I visited London for the first time and I always come away with a renewed feeling of tingling warmth over our blood ties. As we say along Piccadilly: "London is top trick."

It's Time We Stopped Fooling Ourselves

By Brig.-Gen. Henry J. Reilly, O. R. C.

AFTER two months' negotiations, protocols just signed in London have finally put the Hoover debt moratorium plan in practical working shape until next July.

BRIG.-GEN. REILLY

This delay, which is blamed for robbing the moratorium of its expected beneficial effect on business, was due to our effort to PUT THE CART BEFORE THE HORSE in international affairs.

The horse in European international affairs consists of the politico-military policies of the various nations. In other words, it consists of the national policies of each considered so essential to national welfare that the nation concerned will, rather than give up, use its armed forces, that is, GO TO WAR.

The cart, very much under control of the horse, consists of business, including financial, affairs and peace.

We must learn and face this fact of the world as it is today unless we wish to become involved in European international politico-military questions.

We must STOP FOOLING OURSELVES with the belief that our finances and pacifist example and desires are strong enough to dominate these questions and to prevent the WAR TO WHICH SOONER OR LATER THEY ALWAYS LEAD.

This is all the more necessary as the Hoover debt moratorium settled NOTHING. It merely postponed until next July the dangerous question of how far Germany is able and willing to live up to the terms of the Versailles peace treaty.

The first world disarmament conference is due to meet at Geneva next February. If it does this dangerous question will come up just that much sooner.

The fact that the Great War came as a surprise to us in 1914 should have taught us the lesson that in Europe POLITICO-MILITARY QUESTIONS DOMINATE. The few in this country who realized this dominance saw the war coming. The majority who put the power of current international finance and various peace movements in first place were greatly and disagreeably surprised.

The Versailles peace conference should have rubbed the fact indelibly into our consciousness. Our President, with other American delegates, participated and helped to make the VERSAILLES TREATY, WHICH HAS BEEN THE BASIS EVER SINCE FOR THE EUROPEAN POLITICO-MILITARY SITUATION.

Professor E. E. Turner, the well-known historian of Johns Hopkins University, described the conditions existing during the conference as follows:

"At the opposite extremes were President Wilson and Premier Clemenceau. The American statesman . . . seems to have been without great knowledge of European statesmanship and conditions and often hampered by insufficient information . . . The aged French Premier was wise with the wisdom of long experience and service."

He does not criticize the motives actuating these two statesmen. He does, however, compare their respective capabilities to handle practically a serious international political situation.

The negotiations and outcome of the debt and reparations moratorium everywhere show us still to be "without great knowledge of European statesmanship and conditions," and still hampered by "insufficient information."

"WITHOUT GREAT KNOWLEDGE OF EUROPEAN STATESMANSHIP," we intended to put through an international debt and moratorium, using our financial power as a club to force compliance with our wishes regardless of the politico-military situation established by the Versailles treaty.

"HAMPERED BY INSUFFICIENT INFORMATION," we tried to force France and the lesser powers similarly placed into giving up "rights" granted them by this treaty, though they have repeatedly shown they would use force first.

The thing is that we tried to get Germany to make further concessions, though all threats of revolution in and war from that country have been based on German insistence that the terms of the treaty are too drastic to be borne peacefully.

Finally, we have now come to the terms which "knowledge of European statesmanship" and sufficient "information" would have made us propose in the first place.

We want trade and financial business with Europe.

We do not want their political quarrels, which our ancestors came to this country to get away from, transported to our shores.

We do not want to fight in the wars which these quarrels inevitably cause.

Lawkeeper

The law says: Jail for those who steal,
A cell for those who cheat.
The statute books and codes reveal
The end wrongdoers meet.

No man could say he owed a debt
Or played the cheat or thief,
The law would call him good, and yet
His path was strewn with grief.

For since the law does not exact
That man shall kindly be
Or try to force a generous act
A selfish man was he.

He was afraid of doing wrong
The law might intervene,
But not afraid, since he was strong
Of grasping ways and mean.

A happier role in life he'd played
Who kept the law in mind
If he had also been afraid
To do a deed unkind.
